OBITUARY.

Louis J. Denton.

...as the sun had passed below the ... horizon Saturday evening, the ...ne of God's noblest works, an ...an, passed peacefully away, to ... the fullness of eternal glory.

...e past eleven weeks Louis J. ...of Prospect Hill has been a sufferer ...chronic cystitis and inflammation ...tomach, until Saturday evening ...n the end came.

...e asked those who had watched so ...ngly and tenderly by his bedside if ... would turn his face to the West, ... he might once more see the sinking ... This wish was gratified, and as he ...was placed thus upon his bed his life went ...ut so quietly and gently that the change ...s scarcely noticeable.

...ot once during the eleven-weeks ill...nesses did one impatient word pass his lips. He rested entirely on the arm of Him who was his strength. The disease which had fastened its grip upon him ...aused considerable restlessness, and often during the night when this uneasi...ss would seem to get the best of him, ...sister, Mrs. Bliss, would read selec...ns to him from the Psalms. The com...t and ease given would call forth the ...rds, "That 's beautiful! That 's grand!"

...Mr. Denton's life was a quiet one, and ...de up of deeds more than words. As ...thorough Christian man he followed ...ely the lines of duty, and his identity ... aggressive religious movements was ...rked, and his activity in the First ...ptist Church and its missions was ...use for much encouragement to all. ...s attendance at divine services was ...ular, and previous to his illness he had ...ssed only three Sundays at church ser...es in thirteen years. It was his ...t to be with God's people, ...eist in the work that was ...ar and dear to his heart. ...e he passed away he called to his ...'de his employes, and his regret ...sed to be that he had n't done enough ...them. He urged them to place their ...st in his heavenly father.

...ouis James Denton, who was next to ...youngest of eight children, was born ...Benton, Yates County, N. Y., June 16, ...8, and was nearly 57 years old. His ...yhood days were spent in Benton, and ...an early age the family moved to Penn ...n, a few miles distant, where he lived ...r some time. At the age of 10 he united ...th the Penn Yan Baptist Church, and ...s a member until the family moved to ...infield in 1859. When the family had ...led here an impressive incident oc...red, when the family of seven united ... the First Baptist Church. Louis ... his brother Sylvester formed ...rtnership, and started the nursery on ...pect Hill, where it stands today. Af...he death of Sylvester Louis continued ...usiness, and up to the time of his ...ss was very active in it.

...ptember 15, 1881, Mr. Denton married ...ss D. Brown of Dunellen, daughter of ...d Mrs. Moses D. Brown, who with ...wifely attentions ministered to ...pt and comfort that could make ...s closing days. Mrs. Denton and ...children, Sarah Pauline Denton, ...ur Lewis Denton and Frank Chester ...ton, are left. Two sisters, Miss Clara Denton and Mrs. Bliss, wife of Rev. E. Bliss of Washington, also survive him. ...e funeral services will be held Wed...lay afternoon at 2:30 from his late ...e. Interment will be private.

Abraham C. Coriell.

...he funeral of Abraham C. Coriell was ...d at Greenbrook yesterday afternoon. ... large farmhouse was crowded with ...tives, friends and neighbors, and a ...g line of carriages followed the body ... the grave in the North Plainfield ...metery.

...ev. A. I. Martine of Dunellen read a ...age of Scripture and preached a very ... discourse from the fourth chapter of ...es, part of verse 14—"What is your ...?" Rev. Mr. Todd, also of Dunellen, ...ed a prayer full of comfort to the ...tives and friends, and of counsel to ...wed. The body looked remarkably ...al. The appropriate emblem on the ...t was a sheaf of ripe wheat.

The ...tendent's report was very thor...taking up the work in all its ...ches and showing the growth. By ...port it was shown that the past ...ad been by far the most prosperous ... history of the church. AT REST.

Laura Probasco.

The funeral services over the remains of Laura A., late wife of Frank Probasco, took place yesterday afternoon from Hope Chapel. The chapel was filled with friends and relatives who had gathered to pay their last tribute to the decedent. Rev Dr D J Yerkes officiated at the services and his words were very touching and of comfort to the friends and relatives. He told how the departed had for many years been a member of Hope Chapel Sunday-school. In concluding he was glad to announce that she had made her peace with the Lord and that she was willing to go. One very touching incident occurred when by request her favorite hymn "Meet Me There" was sung, this hymn being her favorite while here upon earth.

After the service, the congregation was given an opportunity to look on the face of the loved one who had gone before.

On the casket were many flowers, among them a floral harp with the words "In God's Care", and a beautiful pillow with the words "Our Laura".

Those acting as pall-bearers were Jesse Ayers, Chas. J. Noel, H. McLain, A. Allen, S. Goff and R. Dennis. Interment was in the First Baptist Cemetery.

Scot Terry's Good Shooting.

Scot Terry defeated William Ross of Elizabeth in a pigeon shooting contest that was shot in Marion Saturday, by the score of 42 to 37. The match was at 50 birds for a stake of $100 a side. The victory is more than creditable, for Scot is somewhat handicapped by a crippled wrist, the result of an injury received some years ago. The birds furnished for the race were strong and swift of flight, and a high wind made them a difficult lot. Scot was particularly clever in the use of his second barrel, and was repeatedly applauded for his skilful execution. His score of 42, under the conditions, was a highly commendable one. A large delegation of Plainfield sportsmen witnessed the match. There is a good-natured rivalry existing between the two cities, and several other matches are being arranged.

An Arbor-Day Suggestion.

To the Mayor, Common Council, and all persons interested:

While we are discussing questions of improvements in our beautiful city, would it not be a good idea to have trees set over the southeasterly part of the City Park, bordering on Ninth street? It would add much to the beauty in a few years to come. It is just the time of year now to do it. The Street Commissioner and a few men could go to some woodland and gather enough in a day or so to set over the space, and possibly men could be found to volunteer to go and set them. What young man would not be glad to get a tree, and have it to say he set such a tree in the park in days to come? I will volunteer to help plant the trees.

Col. Demarest Hears Praise.

(From The Brockville, Ont., Enterprise)

After two years of persistent effort President Cleveland succeeded, just as Congress adjourned a few weeks ago, in having the dependent pensioners living in Canada restored to the rolls. Consequently Col. J. A. Demarest has had the pleasure of listening to a great deal of sincere commendation and heartfelt praise for his President and his Government, from the soldiers' mothers and widows that have been dropping into the consulate again to have their vouchers executed. Not only have they been put back on the rolls, but they have received checks for the period of suspension, ranging from $186 to $252.

Ole's Luck, Thursday Night.

Gus Heege, author of "Ole's Luck", which is announced for Music Hall for Thursday night, has blended comedy and pathos in such a charming manner that at times the audience is held spellbound. Richard T. Brown, as Ole Larson the singing Swede, is so natural in the character that one would almost think him a native-born Swede, and his singing, which is a feature, should not be missed. The remaining portion of the cast are all good in their respective roles, and fine specialties are introduced by them during the action of the play.

—W. D. Murray will conduct his regular weekly Bible study in the Y. M. C. A. Building tonight.

—The annual meeting of the First Baptist Church will be held Tuesday evening, April 9, at 8, in the church. Four trustees are to be elected and other important business transacted.

The Minstrels Tomorrow.

Primrose & West's big minstrel show, to appear in Music Hall tomorrow night, is composed of forty white and thirty black comedians, seventy all told, and each of the seventy is an artist of unusual excellence. Two distinct organizations are rolled into one, making the most gigantic aggregation of minstrel talent ever heard or dreamed of. There are two military bands, one white, one colored, both uniformed in the most extravagant fashion, and two distinct first-parts, concluding with the most pronounced sensation ever introduced.

"Perhaps you would not think so, but a very large proportion of diseases in New York comes from carelessness about catching cold," says Dr. Cyrus Edson. "It is such a simple thing and so common that very few people, unless it is a case of pneumonia, pay any attention to a cold. New York is one of the healthiest places on the Atlantic coast and yet there are a great many cases of catarrh and consumption which have their origin in this neglect of the simplest precaution of every day life. The most sensible advice is, when you have one get rid of it as soon as possible. By all means do not neglect it." Dr. Edson does not tell you how to cure a cold but we will. Take Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. It will relieve the lungs and expectoration, open the secretions and soon effect a permanent cure. 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy, Park and Northjavenues. T. S. Armstrong, manager.

PARK CLUB HOLDS IT.

Still Whist Champion of the United States.

THE FOUR WIN BY 3 POINTS.

Quaker City Again Routed, in an Intensely Absorbing Contest for the Challenge Silver Trophy—Other Experts to Try Their Mettle.

The Park Club whist team again displayed their superior skill at this great American game of cards, Saturday, when they defeated the Philadelphia Whist Club of Philadelphia, by the score of 21 to 18, for the silver championship trophy of the American Whist League, which is composed of the crack whist clubs of the principal cities in the United States.

The Park Club four, composed of Messrs. Townsend, Rogers, McCutchen and Howell, won their first victory one week ago Saturday, when they defeated by one point the Hamilton Whist Club, also of Philadelphia, and thereby gained the title of the champion whist players of the United States, and brought home the trophy. The announcement that a little unheralded club from a small Jersey town had conquered what were considered the best whist players in the country, and probably of the world, surprised and startled the crack players all over, and thrust unexpected honor and fame on the Parks. This achievement carried with it the necessity of meeting the clubs that had challenges already filed with the Hamilton Club, and the first one in order was the Philadelphia Whist Club, composed of Messrs. Neff, Hill, Hart and Lowry.

These players arrived from the City of Brotherly Love on the 1:12 train Saturday afternoon, and were met by their Plainfield opponents, at the North Avenue station, who conveyed them to the clubhouse of the Union County Country Club. The Country Club had graciously bestowed to them the use of their secluded card rooms, it being necessary for the players to have absolute quiet during the progress of the game, and the Park clubhouse not affording the desired accommodations in that direction.

This game of mental skill, where the resources required are so vast that it tasks the judgment, the perception, the memory, and the invention of its players, who to succeed have to grasp and apply with keen foresight and advantage the possible points, requires complete attention to playing and an absence of all detracting elements, such as may be occasioned where there is the noise incident to the presence of spectators.

Therefore it was with closed doors that the contest was commenced at 2, with only the players, referees and recorder as occupants of the room. For four hours the contestants played continuously and noiselessly before the first round of the game that calls into use all of the calculating powers of its participants was finished. It was a battle royal, in which every hand was studied with the careful code of science known to whist players, and unlike most contests the score was kept secret. This fact was naturally conducive to keeping them in a state of constant anxiety, but it was necessary for each player to have his senses cool and acute, and the various hands were sagaciously played. When the first half was finished and the announcement made that the Philadelphians were one point ahead, all felt a relief from the suspense of suppressed and controlled anxiety.

An intermission of an hour, during which the players of both clubs, J. B. Dumont, president of the Country Club, George Thomas, of the Elizabeth Whist Club, referee, A. E. Taylor of the Knickerbocker Whist Club of New York, and Mr. Hawley of the Philadelphia Whist Club, recorder, sat down to one of the Country Club's best dinners, served to rest the minds and replenish the energies for the second and deciding half.

At 7 the playing was resumed, and was finished shortly after 11. The second half was of course more exciting than the first, and gave evidence of the fact that the Park Club are stayers to the last, finishing, in the terms of the sporting parlance, on a canter. Long before the game was finished the Park and Country Club members, who were worked up to fever heat over the contest, began to arrive at the clubhouse, anxious to learn whether or not the trophy was to remain in Plainfield only a week and then go back to the Quakers. When the recorders came out at the close of the game and announced the victory of the Park Club four by three points, there was great rejoicing in a quiet way over the result, and the victors were received with many handshakes. However, it was realized that the Philadelphia whisters had put up a scientific game, but the Plainfielders were invincible to them.

The latter part of this week—probably Saturday—the Albany Whist Club will visit Plainfield and contest for the trophy. It is almost too much to expect that the Park four can hold the trophy through another contest, when it is realized what tremendous mental force is spent in the games, and the experts that are matched against them.

A large and beautiful floral piece graced the playing room in the Country Club Saturday, the gift of Councilman Chas. J. Fisk.

The silver championship trophy will be on exhibition during this week in the display window of J. Hervey Doane's jewelry store on Park avenue.

Reviving the Mission Work.

An excellent meeting to arouse interest in missions was held in Trinity Reformed Church last night. The attendance was good, and all enjoyed the music and the speeches. Superintendent Anthony introduced the speakers. President W. D. Murray spoke on foreign missions. He believed in the foreign field because it was espoused in the Lord's Prayer, the long-meter doxology, and the great commandment "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature". He made an excellent address, and said we must get information and give time and money.

C. G. Mallory, secretary of the Students Voluntary Band of Rutgers College, said "Ye are Christ's", and urged the Christian Endeavorers to greater efforts in giving and going. He was very earnest.

Marvelous Results.

From a letter written by Rev. J. Gunderman, of Diamondale, Mich., we are permitted to make this extract: "I have no hesitation in recommending Dr. King's New Discovery, as the results were almost marvelous in the case of my wife. While I was pastor of the Baptist Church at Rives Junction she was brought down by pneumonia succeeding la grippe. Terrible paroxysms of coughing would last hours with little interruption and it seemed as if she could not survive them. A friend recommended Dr. King's New Discovery; it was quick in its work and highly satisfactory in results. Sold by L. W. Randolph druggist. Regular size, 50c and $1; our price 45c and 90c.

DEAD IN TEN MINUTES

What Was Supposed To Be Anti-Toxine Kills a Girl.

Believed That Something Other Than Anti-Toxine Was Put in the Bottle Which Was Filled in Germany—The Unfortunate Girl Died in Convulsions.

New York, April 1.—A fluid supposed to be anti-toxine, purchased in the original package from Schutzenberg & Koechel, on Murray street, this city, the American agents for the Behring company of Germany, and bearing the seal of the Behring company, was injected into the arm of Miss Bertha M. Valentine, 17 years old, of Williamsburg. The girl died ten minutes afterward.

Something Wrong with Anti-Toxine.

The doctor who injected the fluid, the girl's father, the physician who performed the autopsy, and the coroner agree in the belief both that the fluid poisoned the girl and that by some mistake something other than anti-toxine was put in the bottle in Germany. Miss Valentine had nursed her cousin, Louis Hampston, 9 years old, who died of diphtheria on Thursday.

Change Noticed Immediately.

Dr. Korthright injected the contents of the bottle in the package, about two and a half drachms of fluid, into Miss Valentine's left arm. It was evident immediately afterward that something was wrong.

Died Within Eight Minutes.

Miss Valentine complained of a tickling sensation throughout the body and sank to a lounge, near which she was standing. She was unable to sit up, and fell back on the lounge. Her face blackened and she went into convulsions. Eight minutes after the fluid was injected into her arm she died.

THE BOY WAS SANDBAGGED.

Young Kahn Regains Consciousness in the Philadelphia Hospital.

Philadelphia, April 1.—David Kahan, the Brooklyn boy who was found insensible in Logan square early on Friday morning, recovered consciousness yesterday. The theory that Kahan shot himself by firing down his throat has been abandoned. Kahan asserted that he was struck upon the street by some one and lost consciousness. The police, who have inclined to the belief that Kahan attempted to commit suicide by shooting will have to abandon that theory now and work out the sandbagging theory. Kahan will probably recover from his injury, concussion of the brain.

TO EXPIRE APRIL 20.

Conditions of the Temporary Armistice Granted by Japan.

London, April 1.—A Tokio dispatch to the Central News says that the locality of the enforcement of the armistice granted by Japan comprises Fengtien, Chinli and Shanghtung. The opposing armies are to maintain the positions hitherto occupied, and are not to advance beyond them. Neither government is precluded from making any new distribution and arrangement of troops not intended to augment the armies actually in the field, but at sea transports conveying troops or material contraband of war are subject to capture. The term of the armistice is three weeks and expires without notice at midday on April 20, providing the peace negotiations are not broken off in the meantime. The convention was signed Saturday. Li Hung Chang obtained the signatures of the Japanese plenipotentiaries, and Count Ito obtained the signature of Li Hung Chang. The armistice does not apply to places not specified in the convention.

Life Sentence for Koyama.

A dispatch from Tokio to the Central News says that Koyama, the young Japanese who shot Li Hung Chang, has been sentenced to imprisonment for life at hard labor.

VICTORIA HOTEL CLOSED.

The Famous New York Inn's Career Ended at Midnight Last Night.

New York, April 1.—The Victoria hotel closed its doors at midnight last night. There were about forty guests in the hotel when Joseph C. Youenes, the assignee, sent a notification to each one briefly stating that the affairs of the hotel were in such a condition that it was deemed advisable to suspend business altogether. The usual routine was observed until midnight, when the doors were closed and bolted, the lights were extinguished, and the great building stood deserted. The passing of the Victoria hotel is a matter of great interest, not only to the hotel men of the city, but to the traveling public. There is no probability that it will ever open its doors again as a public resort. It has long been one of the best known hotels in the metropolis.

ARMENIAN TORTURES.

Further Details of the Atrocities Practiced by the Turks.

London, April 1.—The Daily Telegraph will to-day publish a despatch from Moosh, via Kars, March 31. This says that only the weather prevents the commission of inquiry into the Armenian outrages from inspecting the ruined villages and pits that characterize more eloquently than any living witnesses the nameless horrors committed by the sultan's troops. The only unsolved question is where the orders for these atrocities emanated. A dispatch from Bitlis, via Kars, narrates the tortures inflicted by the Turkish soldiers. Some of the victims were forced to stand for from twenty-four to thirty-six hours in a sentry box bristling with sharp iron spikes and their flesh was torn with hot pincers.

SEIZED AND SEARCHED

Experience of the Pathan in Chinese Waters.

A Shot Fired Across Her Bow—The Mongolians Mistook Iron Balls Used in Cotton Machinery for a New Kind of Bomb—Great Britain Soon Put a Stop to the Matter.

New York, April 1.—The officers of the steamer Pathan, in port here from Japanese ports, tell in detail the particulars of the seizure of their vessel by the Chinese while in the Formosa channel, on her last trip from New York with a cargo of 5,000 tons of general merchandise consigned to Shanghai and Japanese ports.

Did Not Understand the Signal.

They had just left Foochow and were off the island of White Dogs on September 20, when they observed a Chinese customs boat, a telegraph boat and a Chinese man-of-war, the Nanchin. The latter was flying a signal that could not be made out. Second officer Graham, who was on the bridge at the time, saw her heading for the Pathan and presently she fired a gun to leeward.

Fired Across Their Bows.

"We were not interested in her," he said, "and we paid no attention. She fired another gun and we saluted with the British ensign. A third time she fired, a solid shot across our bows and displayed a signal which we were then able to see. Translated, it read: 'If you will wait a minute'. We thought it was to stop and did so. She came around our stern with her guns trained on us.

Compelled To Follow Them.

"A boat came alongside bearing a third lieutenant who demanded our register and manifest. We gave it to him and he returned to the warship. Shortly they signalled 'Follow us.' They had found on our manifest, among other things, a small case of cartridges, and two small cases of revolvers. They were hardly more than toys.

Cargo Too Much for Them.

"This was their excuse for holding us up. War had not been declared when we sailed from New York. We followed to a point behind the White Dogs and the chief mandarin came aboard and demanded that he should be allowed to search the ship. The cargo was too much for him, however, and he gave it up, but remarked that we had munitions of war, and we denied it."

Guns Trained on Her.

Despite Captain Wright's threat to complain to the British consul the Pathan was ordered to follow the man-of-war to Ki Sung. Two officers, twelve sailors and twelve marines were put aboard. The captain was refused permission to communicate with the British consul at Tamsui, and the man-of-war and the other boats kept guard of her, the former keeping a searchlight on her at night and the guns trained on her at all times.

Seized Parts of Cotton Machinery.

In port work was begun on transferring the cargo to other vessels under the direction of the chief mandarin ashore. In the cargo were found a quantity of iron balls about the size of baseballs. They had small holes in them and were for use in cotton machinery, being destined for Shanghai. But the Chinamen thought they had discovered a patent shell and at once seized them and reported to that effect to the governor of Formosa.

Threatened to Blow Up the Steamer.

Lest the Britishers should attempt to steal away with their vessel, the Chinese officials threatened to blow up the steamer if such an attempt was made, and this regardless of the fact that about two hundred armed soldiers of their own were kept constantly aboard, and would, presumably, have shared the fate of the Englishmen.

Compelled To Release Her.

On October 3 word was got to the British consul, who communicated with his government, and the immediate reply was to the effect that the Pathan must be released within twenty-four hours or something would happen. October 5 she resumed her voyage, and, after discharging her cargo, was engaged in the transport of goods between ports in Japan by the Japanese government for two months when she loaded with tea for New York.

TELLS A WOMAN'S STORY.

Written for Eyes of Other Women.

[SPECIAL TO OUR LADY READERS.]

There is inestimable pleasure in doing good to others, and joy in a grateful recognition of the act.

On the old York Road, Huntington Park, Philadelphia, dwells Miss M. Downs, whose portrait we give. She desires that her case may be stated as a means of benefiting others. She says: "Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has cured me of Kidney trouble, painful menstruations, and headaches. It is truly a wonderful medicine. I cannot describe my feelings before I took it. The pain in my back was dreadful, and during menstruations the agony I suffered nearly drove me wild; and then my head would ache for a week, and now this is all over, thanks to your good remedy. I trust my testimonial will lead others to take it and be cured. They can find it at any drug store. Our druggist says the demand for it is very large, it is helping so many sickly women."

WHY NOT HORSE FLESH?

Chance in Germany for Our Barred Out Shippers.

The American Consul at Brunswick Makes a Novel Suggestion—Believes We Have the Opportunity To Open Up a New Trade with the Fatherland.

Washington, April 1.—One of the most striking novelties in recent consular reports received at the state department is the deliberate recommendation of a United States consul that American packers should turn their attention to shipping horse flesh to Germany. "In view of the prohibition of German markets to American cattle there is another direction toward which American packers might well turn their attention. That is the preparation and sale of horse meat."

Large Consumption of Horse Meat.

This is the opening paragraph of a report just received from Consul Edward Tingle at Brunswick, Germany. Mr. Tingle adds: "While exact statistics as to the consumption of horse meat are difficult to obtain it seems it is almost as great as that of beef or mutton in the large cities of Germany. In smaller cities, where there is some prejudice against horse meat, the consumption is about one-third that of beef, but in these places the use of horse meat is growing daily.

Beef Too Expensive.

"Beef and other first-class meats cost from 15 to 25 cents per pound in Germany, and are out of the reach of the average workman, who receive seventy-five cents or a dollar per day." The demand for horse meat has grown to such an extent that it is beginning to be difficult to supply it, and this is where the opportunity for the American packer comes in, according to Mr. Tingle.

Supply Almost Exhausted.

Formerly the German butcher had little difficulty in procuring for slaughter horses which were either worn out or injured so as to be worthless, but the supply of this class of animals is about exhausted, and horses for butchering now cost from $45 to $50, where formerly they could be had for $5 or $10. The consequence is that just as people have become attached to horse meat the butcher finds he must raise his prices.

Cost of Raising Cheaper.

Horses, says Mr. Tingle, can be raised in the United States much cheaper than cattle. They can be slaughtered by any of the American packing houses as easily as cattle, and they can be shipped alive much more easily than cattle and can be sold either on the hoof or dressed at a price certainly greater than seven cents per pound. The meat is consumed in Germany in both a salted and smoked state.

Doctors Think Riggs Will Recover from His Injury.

New York, April 1.—The doctors in Gouverneur Hospital are working with great interest on the case of Edward Riggs, who was admitted to the institution on Thursday suffering from a broken neck. It was said at the hospital yesterday that hope was entertained of saving Riggs' life and of ultimately discharging him from the hospital nearly restored to his former condition. He is quiet, speaking only at intervals, and then complaining of great pain in his neck and head. He also complains of his constrained position in the cot, with his head and neck uncomfortably bandaged into an immovable position.

Arrest of a Couple at Albany Believed To Be Professional Crooks.

Albany, N. Y., April 1.—John Smith and Minnie Welvill, charged with passing a bogus check on Whitney & Co. drygoods dealers have been arrested and are held here. In their possession were found bank books on the Merchants National bank of Boston, representing several hundred dollars, and the Sixth National bank of New York, where several thousand dollars was on deposit. The police think they are professional crooks. They jumped a board bill at the Kenmore amounting to $25.

STRANGLED AND DISMEMBERED.

The Murdered Body of a Colored Woman Found in New York.

New York, April 1.—The body of a colored woman, strangled to death and with both legs cut off at the knees and a large gash at the right hip, was found by a passer-by at 6 o'clock yesterday morning in front of No. 75 Sixth avenue. The police were notified, and the sergeant on duty sent two men with a stretcher to bring the bundle to the station house. When it was unwrapped the police saw the dead body of a colored woman. Both legs were cut off at the knees and were placed alongside the hips, feet downwards. Around the neck was a piece of pink gauze or cheesecloth, about five feet long, which was twisted to serve as a rope. This was knotted once over the windpipe, and drawn so tightly that the skin was broken and a few drops of blood oozed out. The tongue was protruding. At the outer side of the right hip, and extending along to the lower part of the abdomen was a large and jagged gash. The skin was drawn away from the borders of the wound, and the severed muscles stuck out as though cut in a rough manner. An examination of the legs showed that they had been cut off with a saw. The eyes were closed and looked as though the lids had been pulled down after death. The arms lay across the breast, the right hand crossed over the left, and tied with what appeared to be a section of ordinary clothesline. A slip-noose was made over the left wrist, then passed around the right wrist. The rope was then passed around the body once, pinioning the arms closely to the chest, the end secured in front in a double knot. The body was in a semi-nude condition. The police are entirely without a clue as to the victim or her slayer.

With His Party He Will Remain There Until This Evening.

Washington, April 1.—Governor William McKinley, accompanied by his wife and Mrs. Smith and Mr. and Mrs. Osborne, of Boston, arrived in Washington at 11.10 last night from Savannah. Mr. and Mrs. Osborne continued their journey to Boston, leaving at 11.35 o'clock over the Pennsylvania road. Governor McKinley appeared to be fully recovered from the effects of the recent indisposition from which he suffered in the south. He declined to be interviewed on political topics, but referred in pleasant terms to the experiences of his trip, which he seemed to have thoroughly enjoyed. The governor and party will remain in Washington until this evening and then start on the last stage of their homeward journey.

FETES TO BISMARCK

All Germany Unites in Doing Him Honor.

To-day Is the ex-Chancellor's Eightieth Birthday—A Great Time at Friedrichsruhe—Joy Fires Kindled All Over the Fatherland—Numerous Congratulatory Messages.

Friedrichsruhe, April 1.—To-day, the eightieth anniversary of Prince Bismarck's birthday, broke beautiful, the sun shining brightly and the air clear and warm.

Breakfasts with His Family.

Prince Bismarck took breakfast alone with his family at 10 o'clock this morning. At noon he will receive the cuirassiers of Magdeburg, the rectors of the universities and other officials who will come to offer congratulations. He will not make an address, but one of the delegation of students will deliver a long oration for the prince's edification. After 7 o'clock no one will be received. At 8 o'clock the torchlight procession will take up its march.

Beer and Sausages.

Some of Prince Bismarck's admirers, evidently recalling the story that when a student the prince cured himself of a fever by eating two pounds of sausages and drinking several litres of beer, are sending to the ex-chanellor beer and sausages enough to provision a besieged garrison. The platform of the railway station has been piled up with barrels and boxes which men have been busy all day carting to the castle.

Even His Famous Dog Remembered.

A large Japanese incense burner which arrived from Tokio was set up in the garden opposite the principal entrance. The sword presented by the emperor lies on a table in the room where the chief presents are displayed. Surrounding it are clocks, pipes, walking sticks and beautifully illuminated addresses in embossed leather, wooden, velvet and metal cases. Presents are also still arriving for Bismarck's famous dog. Over a million special birthday postal cards intended to be sent to Bismarck have been sold. Thousands of these cards have gone to America.

Great Day in Hamburg.

Hamburg, April 1.—At 6.30 last evening, notwithstanding rain and mud, the streets were a black mass of people, in which here and there could be seen many colored dots, these being the caps of all hues worn by the 6,000 students gathered here to take part in to-day's procession. On all the houses in the city flags already displayed, and on most of them wreaths and garlands add to the decorations. Many of the shop windows are converted into small temples for the glorification of Bismarck. In these busts of the ex-chancellor surrounded with suitable decorations and inscriptions are to be seen.

Wholesale Illumination.

There was hardly a house without candles and tinted lamps in the windows. Lombards bridge was illuminated with 68,000 jets of gas. The Disconto bank was made brilliant with 12,000 gas jets, and the Deutsche bank displayed 10,000. On the Rathaus were 10,000 candles, on the Bourse 5,000, while the Victoria hotel had 2,000 colored lamps. Roman candles were burned on the roof of the Bourse for two hours. In the centre of the Inner Alster a hundred barges are stationed, from which fireworks will be set off to-night. More than 2,000 rockets will be fired from the quays.

Parade of Students.

The police stopped all traffic after 7 o'clock to-day. At that hour 4,000 students from the universities assembled in the Moorweide and at 8 o'clock they started on their march, proceeding through the Dammthor, Glockengiesserwall and Steinwall to the Klosterthor station, where they took a train for Aumuehle.

Celebration at Rudesheim.

Rudesheim, April 1.—At noon yesterday the people of the Rhine valley united in honoring Bismarck at the national monument on the Niederwald. Immense crowds filled the city, coming from long distances. Conservatives, national liberals and centrists took part in the ceremonies. A large number of men had been at work decorating the scene, but a stormy southwest wind and several days of rain delayed them greatly. The ceremonies began when the first president of Hesse-Nassau made the opening speech and gave a toast to the emperor. This was followed by the singing of the national air. Professor Onken, from Giessen, made an address eulogistic of Bismarck, which was followed by the singing of "Deutschland Ueber Alles," and then the "Kaiser Wilhelm and Fuerst Bismarck" march concluded the day's programme. At 9 o'clock there was a general illumination.

The Emperor's Banquet.

Berlin, April 1.—All the princes diplomats and members of the Bundesrath will attend the emperor's banquet in honor of Prince Bismarck this evening. Special prayers for Prince Bismarck were offered yesterday in all the protestant churches of Germany. The school children are having a holiday to-day.

At Frankfort-on-the-Main.

Frankfort-on-the-Main, April 1.—Saturday night the Saalbau was crowded with guests on the occasion of the kommers in honor of Bismarck. Hans Blum, of Leipzig, and Professor Rohrhurst, of Heidelberg, were the orators. Yesterday the festivities were continued. A feature of the celebration was the uncovering of a memorial tablet in the house on Grossee Gallus strasse where Bismarck dwelt when Prussian ambassador to the German diet, in 1852. Festivities in honor of Prince Bismarck were held in Wittenberg, Esrenruhr, Brunswick and Posen.

New York Annual Supply Bill.

Albany, April 1.—Assemblyman Danforth E. Ainsworth, chairman of the assembly ways and means committee, has completed the annual bill, and it will be introduced in the assembly to-night. It carries appropriations aggregating $1,462,703.47, which is $303,630.84 less than last year's bill.

Uncle Sam's Tars Fighting.

Kingston, Jamaica, April 1.—Sailors from the United States cruiser New York got into a fight here Saturday with a squad of coal-heavers. Several of the latter were so badly injured that they had to be taken to a hospital.

JOKE ON ATLANTA POLICE.

They Pronounce the Features of A. Conan Doyle and Eugene Field Criminal.

The erudition of the Atlanta police force was given a test recently and the result has set the town to laughing. A newspaper reporter took pictures of Dr. A. Conan Doyle and Eugene Field to the police officials for the purpose of securing opinions as to the character of the men and the result shows it would never do for either Dr. Doyle or Mr. Field to show himself there.

Chief of Detectives Wright said:

"I don't think they have worked here yet, but they are crooks."

Detective Warten pronounced Field "Billy the Red Hand."

Detective Mehaffey said:

"Both men have worked here; we're watching them close and are dead on to them."

Detective Barret said of Field:

"That smooth faced, bald headed fellow has the hardest face I have ever seen. He's probably a safe cracker and as dead tough a fellow as can be found. The other fellow's a confidence man."

Captain Thompson said:

"If they strike this town they will be arrested sure. We are laying for that kind of people."

Sergeant Slaughter thought the one with the mustache, Doyle, was a smart one with some confidence racket. Field he thought an all round crook and emphasized his judgment by adding:

"You know we can tell a good deal by a man's face."

Detective Ed Casin declared that he had seen the pictures of both men in Superintendent Byrnes' book on criminals.

Those are samples of the views expressed. There was not one redeeming opinion. All declared the men crooks and Field the worst of the two. Detective Davis said he knew them to be safe crackers.

Sergeant White declared Field's picture to be that of Daniel Souder, wanted in Fort Wayne.

Captain Joiner, who is an aspirant for the position of chief of police, displayed his wisdom by declaring Doyle a confidence man and Field a sneak thief. Detective Shackleford had an especially bad opinion of Field, who would, he said, work for any stake, from a nickel up.

APPLYING BY PHOTOGRAPH.

Photography has been applied to many new uses of late, but the strangest application of all is as an attachment to petitions for offices. Of late years the commercial traveler selling hardware, furniture and similar heavy "lines" has made up for the lack of samples by using photographs, and the practice of selling goods reproduced by the camera has become common and profitable.

Recently Congressmen at Washington and others urging the claims of applicants for office have been met with frequent questions from heads of departments as to the personal appearance of candidates. Several secretaries and bureau chiefs have repeatedly said they cared more for one view of a man's face than for a trunkful of indorsements. The clever office-seekers have at last tumbled to the racket of sending their photographs with their regular papers, and the result has been in every way satisfactory. Men who have offices to give out like to make as good a showing as possible, and hence feel they know something of a man when they see his photograph. They say many of the worst appointments made in the civil service are not properly chargeable to them because they have only papers to consider, and these are, of course, uniformly favorable. It is seldom any formal charges or unfavorable comment against an unfit applicant for office are filed, and hence they look upon the photograph idea as a step in the right direction, as it enables them to get a vague idea of the personality of the applicant.

Candidates may not be satisfied with photographs, and one bureau chief expressed the opinion that phrenological charts would be the next fad in official papers.

Set Great Store on Apples.

An American recently returned from England calls attention anew to the high appreciation in which choice apples are held abroad.

"I had occasion," said he, "to repay a few courtesies received at the hands of some English business acquaintances and did so by giving a dinner. In the course of the conversation the subject of American fruit, and apples in particular, was mentioned.

"At once my guests became most enthusiastic, and that led me to send over here for some. They arrived—choice selected Northern Spys—before I left for home. I don't think in all my experience I have ever received more hearty and sincere thanks for any present I have ever made.

"Of course our apples are exceedingly toothsome, but it was almost impossible for me to comprehend the delight they afforded my English friends and their acquaintances. In two cases special dinner parties were given, just exactly as one might be given here if you were presented with a fine saddle of venison, a wild turkey or some other rare game.

"From my experience you can state positively that if you want to make an Englishman your friend for life and at comparatively little outlay just send him a barrel of choice American apples, and I might add just one line to that—be sure that they are well packed for export."

Kind Hearted.

The late Professor Hyrtl was very fond of animals. Some years ago one of his fellow professors undertook some experiments to ascertain the loss of weight in cases of starvation, using for the purpose a lot of rabbits. The subjects of the experiments were weighed every day, but, to the experimenter's astonishment, they gained flesh instead of losing it. It was some time before he found out that Prof. Hyrtl had been keeping them well supplied with food.—San Francisco Argonaut.

Do Alligators Swallow Stones?

The Indians of South and Central America declare that prior to attacking some large animal, such as an ox or buffalo, which may come to the river brink, alligators swallow a stone, so as to acquire additional weight to aid in dragging victims under water. Baivez, who shot and examined several, found stones in all, varying in size according to the size of the 'gator, one fellow having a stone in his stomach that weighed seventy-six pounds.

WANTED A HALF AND GOT IT.

"Judge Holman" Bunco s Supposedly Shrewd New York Lawyer.

It was nearly 6 o'clock in the evening and Lawyer James McKeon was alone in his office on the sixth floor of the Mutual Life building working over a lot of legal papers. Mr. Lewis, who has an office with him and who has a large acquaintance in the West, had gone home. There was a knock on the hall door. Mr. McKeon called "Come in." The door opened and an old but vigorous man came in. He had chin whiskers and a smile, was plainly dressed, wore a black necktie and a derby hat.

"H-m-m," he said, as he opened the door. "Lewis is out, eh?"

"Mr. Lewis has gone home," said Mr. McKeon. "He will be here early in the morning if you want to see him. Is there anything that I can do for you?"

"Well, h-a-r-d-l-y," said the stranger, laughing. "I am Judge Holman, of Indiana. I am very well acquainted with Mr. Lewis. I just thought I might find him in, but it's no matter, you see; no matter. You see, I know Mr. Lewis pretty well, and I was detained here in the building, you see, on business." He kept on laughing. "It's so late, I guess all my friends have gone home. It's too bad, too bad. I left the hotel and I thought I had it with me. I was busy here all the afternoon and I was just going to start for home and I felt in my pocket and discovered to my discomfort that I had left it at the hotel. Careless, I declare. I thought I'd find Lewis in and he might give me enough to get up town. It's no matter, though; I'll walk."

The stranger by this time had closed the office door and was in Mr. McKeon's room leaning over the desk. He still laughed, apparently appreciating the joke on himself. Mr. McKeon laughed with him. The thought flashed across his mind that maybe the "judge" was a fakir, but he was such a respectably dressed and shrewd looking old man that the thought was dismissed in a moment.

"How much do you want?" suggested Mr. McKeon, putting his hand in his pocket.

"W-e-l-l," said the stranger, "really I didn't mean to suggest. You see, Mr Lewis is a good friend of mine. Twenty-five cents or so; something like that. I just want to get up town. It was pure idiocy my coming without my pocketbook."

By this time Mr. McKeon was convinced that it was all right and he pulled out a handful of change and told the stranger to take what he wanted. The stranger carefully selected a quarter and said:

"Thank you, thank you, sir, thank you. I'll be down town to-morrow. Thanks, thanks."

He turned around and started for the door. At the threshold he hesitated and remarked in the most innocent manner possible:

"By the way, I might want to stop on the way up town and I guess I'd better take a half dollar."

Again the thought flashed across Mr. McKeon's mind that the stranger wasn't what he represented himself to be. But a single look at that honest face convinced him that he was wrong and he held out his hand again. The stranger took another quarter and left.

"Judge Holman was in to see you last night," said Mr. McKeon to Mr. Lewis the next morning.

"Judge Holman? Judge Holman?" said Mr. Lewis. "Who is he?"

"Why, the watchdog of the Treasury," said Mr. McKeon.

"Oh-h-h," said Mr. Lewis. "I don't know him. What did he want?"

"Fifty cents," said Mr. McKeon, dryly, the truth dawning on him.

"Oh-h-h," said Mr. Lewis, and the subject has not been mentioned in Mr. McKeon's office since, so great is the sympathy of Mr. Lewis.—New York Sun.

It's the Constant Dropping that Wears.

"Hit hisn't the 'unting has 'urts the 'oress, hit's 'amuser, 'ammer, 'ammer on the 'ard, 'igh road," the English duke is reported to have said. And it's just so with humanity. It isn't the 'unting (for which read working), it's the 'ammer, 'ammer, 'ammer (for which read worry) that sows gray hairs and wrinkles and drives women—not to the grave—oh, dear no, nothing so definite and satisfactory as all that—but to the uncertain and lingering terrors of nervous prostration. A great many prescriptions and practices have from time immemorial been devised to prevent the habit of worrying, but none of them has ever proved so effectual as the simple resolve not to do it. Not to worry, not to fret, not to let the mind prey upon trifles, and, above all, to observe the right perspective and the true proportion of things. It takes lots of strength and will to accomplish all this, but there's no other cure so sure or so potent. Some one has astutely said that it is the little things of life that are really the hardest to bear. When great griefs and trials come strength is given us to meet them, but for the vexing, irritating little splinters of everyday annoyance, there are no anæsthetics or alleviations. Still, it lies within the power of everyone to keep himself poised and braced for the struggle, and then, come what may, he is better able to hold his own.

TRUE STORIES ABOUT CATS.

Instances of the Remarkable Staying Powers of Puss.

It is a popular saying that puss has nine lives, and it is a fact that treatment that would kill many other animals does not kill a cat.

A recent English authority gives some illustrations of this. There used to be a farmer's cat named Joy, who was very fond of horses, and used nearly always to sleep in the stable—often on the backs of one of her friends. Once she was severely kicked and one of the stablemen found her stretched on the ground stiff and cold. He threw the body out on a dunghill, where it lay all day in the sun. In the evening the milkmaid thought she saw signs of life in it and took pussy into the house. In three days puss had entirely recovered.

Another cat, found in a trap, was brutally beaten about the head by a keeper, who, when he had killed it, as he thought, cut off its tail as a trophy. Her mistress carried home what she thought was the corpse; but in three weeks the cat was running about as well as ever, only minus her tail.

On another occasion a boy going to school threw a stone at a cat. It struck her head and she fell dead as he thought. He threw her body into a cornfield where he saw it lying for three days as he passed. On the fourth day, however, it was gone, and shortly afterward the identical cat was washing its face on its master's doorstep as usual. Another boy, seeing an old woman bury three kittens alive, dug them up, although they had been for an hour under ground saved the lives of two of them.

A still more remarkable case of resuscitation is that in which a farmhand, getting angry with a cat, attacked her with a whip, but when he had nearly killed her she escaped. Being unable to catch her again, he chased her into a hole in a wall and then stopped it up with stone and lime. Here the animal remained for a week half dead, when her master suspecting what had been done, released her. In a few weeks she was all right again.

Burial alive seems to agree particularly well with cats. A Scotchman, wishing to get rid of a cat, determined to dispose of her in this way, thinking she would soon be suffocated. He tied her in a bag, dug a hole in the garden and covered her with earth. The next day he went to view the body, and was surprised to see the cat jump out of the bag alive and strong enough to escape by running.

The well known power that cats have of alighting on their feet when they fall or are dropped from a height, even back downward, combined with their wonderful capacity for taking hard blows, has resulted sometimes curiously. For instance, a cat in Dundee, Scotland, sprang for a canary that hung in a cage by a fourth story window. She missed the bird and went out of the window, but struck on her feet and ran away as if nothing had happened.

Then there was a case in which a man, finding a cat killing his pigeons which he kept in an attic of an eight story house, threw the animal out of an open window. On going downstairs he was surprised to see her get up and run away.

CHICAGO CHUCKLES.

Three Popinjays and a Mantled Purp Ahead of New York.

The Gould-Castellane nuptials were celebrated Monday in New York, and Gotham's Four Hundred still is suffering with palpitation of the heart. Every feature of this wedding has been elaborately discussed in the press, and further comment, perhaps, is unnecessary. The young couple probably will be obliged to board for awhile, for the count pathetically explains that he "hasn't a stick of furniture in his name." This difficulty, we believe, can easily be overcome, as installment houses in Paris are said to be quite equal to those of this country.

Now it is Chicago's turn. Gotham will kindly leave the center of the stage for awhile. The engagement of Miss Mary Leiter, eldest daughter of L. Z. Leiter, of Chicago, and George N. Curzon, of Southport, England, is announced.

Count Castellane can trace his lineage back only a thousand years or so, while Mr. Curzon, we are informed by the press dispatches, "is a descendant of William the Conqueror and the possessor of some of the bluest Norman blood England ever produced."

We believe there will be no invidious comparisons on the ground of blueness of blood.

But Miss Leiter secures with a husband a coat of arms officially described as follows:

"Arms—Arg. on a bend sa., three popinjays or collared gu.

"Crest—A popinjay, rising, or collared, gu.

"Another crest—A cockatrice, wings elevated, or tail nowed, with a head at the end thereof.

"Supporters—Dexter, the figure of Prudence, represented by a woman habited, arg., mantled, az., holding in her sinister hand a javelin, entwined with a remora (i. e., serpent), ppr., sinister, the figure of Liberality, also represented by a woman, habited, arg, mantled, purp., holding a cornucopia, ppr.

"Motto—'Recte et Suaviter.'"

And there you are! Three popinjays—count 'em—three. So far as we are informed the Count and Countess Castellane will be forced to go through life without a solitary popinjay.

In a matter of this kind we confess that we are somewhat in doubt concerning what is really needed in order to comply with the requirements of blue blooded aristocracy. Will three popinjays be enough? Should a young married couple start housekeeping with only three popinjays on hand? If it is a matter of money more popinjays can be bought in a minute. It looks to us rather parsimonious to limit the descendants of Bill the Conqueror to three little measly popinjays, while Bill the Birdstore Man has a dozen or more. But, of course, that's none of our business. At any rate, we are sincerely glad that, as the pedigree books are balanced at present, Chicago is still three popinjays and a mantled purp ahead of New York.—Chicago Dispatch.

Funeral of Mrs. Darby.

Funeral services of Mrs. Levi Darby were held in the Scotch Plains Baptist Church Sunday afternoon at 3. Dr. Parks officiated, assisted by the pastor of the church, Rev. J. S. Braker.

The church was well filled with the friends of deceased, who had come to pay their respects to one whom they knew and loved so well.

Dr. Parks preached a very impressive sermon, and referred to the Christian life of the deceased, extending back 56 years over 40 of which was spent in active work with the Scotch Plains church.

Rev. Mr. Braker spoke of her Christian work during his short pastorate of less than a year. Her pew was always occupied on Sunday morning unless through sickness she was obliged to stay at home. Interment was made in the cemetery adjoining the church.

THE EARTH'S INTERESTING SIDE.

The Pacific Regions to Be the Scene of Great Events in the Near Future.

Senator Morgan, in a speech delivered in the Senate, truthfully called the Hawaiian Islands the Gibraltar of the Pacific, and emphasized the importance of controlling them in the interest of American commerce and all our other interests in the Pacific ocean and countries bordering upon that great sea.

The theater of the world's greatest action in the future will be in that part of the world. Factors are at work that in the twentieth century will elevate in power and influence upon the future of civilization and the destinies of the human race the nations that belong to the Pacific ocean region. The commerce of that part of the world is growing with wonderful rapidity, and as China and Japan advance in civilization and consequent power they will demand and receive recognition in the councils of great nations. Australia and New Zealand are coming forward rapidly as powers that will affect in their development the destiny of the race. They, with the nations of the west coast of South America, cannot be ignored. In the Pacific western civilization will be put to its final and crucial test, and in that great movement the United States will take a conspicuous and it may be the most prominent part.

In many respects, therefore, the most serious problem that American statesmen have to deal with is that affecting our future power in the Pacific. England is not blind to the importance to its own interests of the Pacific ocean and its great problems, and it is reaching out to strengthen its position. With that great grasp of such problems which has characterized English statesmanship the leading men of Great Britain are preparing their country for the coming struggle. They are seeking to strengthen it at every point, and they are not neglecting the Hawaiian Islands.

The example thus set should stimulate American statesmen to do likewise. The key to the situation is the Hawaiian Island group. The great nation which controls them will control the Pacific. England is now seeking to lay a cable that would connect Australia and Canada with those islands, and for this purpose it is trying to get the consent of the United States for it to land a cable on one of the uninhabited members of the group and also to occupy a suitable landing place for a cable near the city of Honolulu.—Denver Republican.

Diagnosis by Telephone.

The beneficent uses of the telephone are not as yet fully understood. The other night young Smythe awoke about 3 A. M. with an excruciating pain in his stomach. The more he squirmed the worse he grew. Finally the terrible thought flashed upon him, he had been poisoned. In a moment he dashed out of bed, down stairs to the telephone, and demanded to be switched on to his physician's number without delay.

"For Heaven's sake, doctor, come at once! I'm poisoned!"

The doctor, who had also crawled out of bed to answer the summons, growled back, "What makes you think so?"

"Frightful pain—awful cramps—insides on fire—hurry up, or I'm a dead man!"

"Humph! Does—er—does your stomach make any noise?"

"Yes; kinder growls—must be arsenic, or something."

"Growls, eh? Just put the 'phone against the pit of your stomach. Ah! I thought so—you've been to the French Hospital fete this evening, haven't you?"

"Yes, sir."

"Exactly. You're suffering from a general fermentation of lemonade, crab salad, fruit cake, pickled oysters and Roman punch. You're all right. Just take a little peppermint and ginger, then go to bed and grin it through."—San Francisco Examiner.

A severe rheumatic pain in the left shoulder had troubled Mr. J. H. Loper, a well known druggist of Des Moines, Iowa, for over six months. At times the pain was so severe that he could not lift anything. With all he could do he could not get rid of it until he applied Chamberlain's Pain Balm. "I only made three applications of it," he says, "and have since been free from all pain." He now recommends it to persons similarly afflicted. It is for sale at Reynolds's pharmacy, Park and North avenues. T. S. Armstrong, manager.

VICTORY FOR THE MAN OF DESTINY

Fires His First Gun at the Siege of Toulon. Emerges From Obscurity and His Extraordinary Character Revealed — The Reign of Terror In France.

[Copyright, 1895, by John Clark Ridpath.]

VII.—JACOBIN AND CAPTAIN OF ARTILLERY.

Bonaparte was cashiered; but his case was not hopeless. He was able to leave Corsica with such a record as gave him a fighting chance for recovery. Throughout his life a fighting chance was all that he demanded. By his misconduct as an officer he had brought the disaster on himself. He had overstaid his leave of absence. He had refused to return when summoned to his command. His disobedience was rank.

Busy among the Jacobins of the Corsican towns, Napoleon had heeded not the repeated orders to return to Valence. Getting himself chosen, first major, and then lieutenant-colonel in the alleged National Guards, he had undertaken to get possession of the citadel of Ajaccio, and had failed. His leadership, like a rod of glass, broke to fragments in his hands. He and the whole Bonaparte family were discountenanced, and he was glad to get away—being careful to carry with him a military record which he himself had prepared and the colonel of the Second Battalion had signed, showing his patriotic military services and his rank as an officer. With this he would regain his lost position in the French army.

NAPOLEON BY WHESSEL.

At Valence, there was still much in Napoleon's favor. The royal army was literally going to pieces. The organization of the National Guard in various parts of the kingdom had drawn off many of the officers and infected many more with the disease of patriotism. The colonel of the Fourth Regiment was an old royalist who had gladly cut off the Jacobin Bonaparte from his command. It was useless for the latter to return to Valence, hoping to be reinstated at such a court. He therefore made all speed for Paris, where he would have a hearing before the minister of war.

By the summer of 1793 the roaring winds of revolution were shaking not only the pinnacles, but the very foundations, of French civilization. The old order was already in ruins. Paris was in an uproar. The King and court had been obliged in the preceding autumn to leave Versailles and come, in the most remarkable procession of history, to Paris. The starving populace had gone out to the royal palace, invaded it, hooted around it, drawn forth the King and Queen and their ill fated scion, and had hurried them off into the city, dancing about them en route and shouting in wild joocularity that now they had the baker and the bakeress and the baker's little boy! All this wreck of royalty and nobility heaped itself up in the Tuileries, out of which the ancient monarchy of the Bourbons looked with wan face at the weltering world. The National Convention went on and on, demolishing and reforming, destroying and remorselessly casting out the old institutions of France, and in lieu thereof making a new Constitution out of philosophy and paper!

It was to this Paris that Napoleon came, with a billet of dismissal and a petition for reinstatement. One war minister after another, to the number of six, had now filled the important office before which Bonaparte stood a petitioner for rehearing. The new minister was a Nationalist and favorably disposed towards the Corsican adventurer; for the latter came with a haggard revolutionary face and long hair hanging to his shoulders. There was delay in the office; and Bonaparte, with his former schoolfellow and future secretary, Bourrienne, was well nigh starving in the streets.

To add to his distress, the Royal School for Girls at Saint Cyr, under the immediate patronage of Marie Antoinette, went to pieces, like other existing things; and Elise Bonaparte was turned adrift with no friend in France except her sullen brother. To the credit of the latter, he clung to his sister, and presently took advantage of her presence to get another leave of absence, "in order to conduct her home." But he did not do so until his cause in the war-office had, on the 30th of August, been decided in his favor. He was exonerated, restored to rank, promoted to a captaincy, and to crown all the new commission was dated back to the preceding February.

This was a great victory for the man of destiny. He was Captain Bonaparte. Taking Elise by the hand, he sped away to Lyons and Valence—where he paused to be seen in his new regimentals—and then to Marseilles and Corsica. His return brought together at Ajaccio all the members of the family of Bonaparte. He left behind in Paris the Countess Josephine de Beauharnais, aged twenty-nine. And yonder at Vienna, in her Hapsburg cradle, nine months old, lies the girl-babe Maria Louise. These two shall have relations with history in the next two decades! As for King Louis, he goes down the steeps, with ever-accelerated pace, from the Temple prison to the guillotine.

France had now become an ocean of molten brass, seething, bubbling, breaking along the billows into flames of lurid light. The Revolution was coming to its crisis. Hunger and despair in the hearts of men had done their perfect work. War was on with Prussia and Austria and England. The emigrant nobility across the borders was in league with the enemies of the French nation. That nation had sprung up, an infuriated tigress, and woe be henceforth to traitors! There was intrigue between the dying court and the Emigres beyond the Rhine. It was now or never. The Terror came on; chateaus were flaming; the streets were slippery with red; the axe went always up and down in the Place de la Revolution; the day of death and extermination was at hand.

This condition of affairs in the extinct kingdom of the Bourbons brought the revolutionists of France and those of Corsica into closest sympathy; for Jacobinism is universal. It is simply humanity in insurrection. Whether it be in France, in Germany, in Italy, in the Mediterranean islands, in England, or the party-cursed cities of the United States, it is all the same. The only question with Bonaparte now was whether his destiny might be better attained by the leadership of the Corsican revolutionists or by allying himself with the Jacobins of Paris.

With skillful duplicity he did both. Corsica, on his return, was in a ferment. The popular party was at one with the French democrats. The National Convention passed a decree that the exiled Corsican patriots might return. Paoli went home by way of Paris, where he was recognized as a hero and made lieutenant-general and military governor of his native island. France was divided into departments, and Corsica was declared to be one of these.

Meanwhile, the world was turned upside down. The Convention had taken the autumnal equinox of 1792 as the date of a new era for mankind. It was an epoch of universal abolition. The marvelous thing was that while the old expired under the stroke of the destroyer's wand, the new did not spring up in its place. The King was brought to trial and death. The proud daughter of Theresa went swiftly after her lord.

Moderate patriots throughout France and the world were alarmed and angered. Washington would follow Liberty no further. Paoli, establishing himself at Corte, stood for moderation. He was too old and conservative to be rebaptized in the muddy waters of Jacobinism. But Captain Bonaparte at Ajaccio was not of such mind and kind. He found himself at this juncture on two military steeds, both going in the same direction, but at different rates of speed. He had never resigned his commission as colonel in the Corsican National Guards; but he now held a commission as captain in the French army, and was receiving pay from the national treasury. His captaincy and his colonelcy did not consist. He temporized and intrigued with the revolutionists during the winter of 1792-93; had an interview with Paoli at Corte; departed without satisfaction; broke with the governor, who ceased to be a hero in his eyes; made a conspiracy to invade Sardinia; tried to obtain an independent command; fell under condemnation of the Paolists, and in June of 1793, was obliged to leave Corsica with all the family of Bonaparte.

Napoleon arrived at Nice on the 13th of June, and there rejoined his company. The Fourth Regiment, to which he belonged, had been transferred to the extreme southeast, as a protection against the menaces of the world along that threatened coast. The whole valley of the Rhone was aflame with the Revolution. Horror on horror had been heaped throughout France. In Paris the royal family had been done to death; but on the frontier the French republican armies of Custine and Kellerman, the one at Frankfort and the other at Valmy, after brave battles, had been pressed back from the border. Only that of Dumouriez had triumphed over the Austrians, on the bloody field of Jemmapes, establishing a line of defenses as far as Liege in Belgium and the river Scheldt.

Meanwhile, after the execution of the King, the allied powers of Europe pledged themselves to exterminate the new French Republic—Terror and all—from the face of the earth. It was a thing easily promised, but difficult to accomplish! The duke of Brunswick, notwithstanding his famous proclamation against the French and the liberties of mankind, found it so to his sorrow. England having joined the coalition against the enraged Republic, the latter virtually declared war against the world! Into the midst of all this confusion, uproar and insurrection of an infuriated people against kingdoms and principalities, the hair-line of the solitary Corsican captain's life was now drawn—a black mark almost undiscoverable among the sketches and etchings which history was cutting for the future civilization of Europe.

Napoleon became a French Republican soldier. He was a soldier of fortune in a sense more profound than that phrase had ever before conveyed. It must be confessed that the hardships and merciless conditions through which he had passed, bearing with relentless pressure on his tremendous mind—inflamed as it was with unquenchable ambitions—are better calculated to excite the compassion and sympathy of after times to kindle against him that anger and censoriousness which a merely logical consideration of his shortcomings, failures and unprincipled schemes would suggest. The judgment is mitigated in contemplating such a character emerging from obscurity, under the play of complex forces, into the foreground of light and action.

The regiment of Captain Bonaparte constituted a part of the Army of the South, under command of General Carteaux. It was the business of this division of the French national forces to operate for the recovery of Marseilles and Toulon; for these cities were held by the enemies of France. They had fallen into the power of the English fleets, assisted by the local loyalists. The situation was striking. Patriotism was aflame in both the cities; but the representatives of the late monarchy, protected by a foreign power, were not yet down. It was out of Marseilles that, in July of the preceding year, a band of patriots, most unique and strong, had marched to Paris, singing on the way and to the very porches of the Tuileries, that famous war-song which Claude Joseph Rouget de Lisle had given to the French nation and to all free men.

So against Marseilles and Toulon, for wrestling them from the English and loyalists, the forces of General Carteaux are, on the 9th of October, 1793, divided and sent. Captain Bonaparte's regiment, with others, is directed against Toulon. He is given command of a section of the artillery, and is at last in his element. Now for the first time he is able to direct a battery against the enemy, and to utter that tremendous word, "Fire!" Here and now the cloud of obscurity lifts from the life of this extraordinary character, revealing him to the world as one of the greatest in the annals of mankind.

A. Conan Doyle,

the great light of the new romantic school of fiction, has written another story for The Daily Press, which is, if possible, quite as fascinating as his famous "Medal of Brigadier Gerard," published in this and other papers from Dec 10 to Dec. 14. The new story, publication of which will begin Tuesday, April 2, is entitled

HOW THE BRIGADIER HELD THE KING

It is an exciting story of adventure with brigands in the mountains of Spain.

The style in which it is written is characterized by the dash and spirit so notable in the Brigadier's adventures in carrying the message of Napoleon.

It wolud be a misfortune to miss this story, and readers of The Press will do a favor to their friends if they provide them with copies of the paper containing it.

ONLY A WOMAN.

It was Helen Hoyt's third revolution in the fashionable maelstrom called "society," and as yet, though slightly giddy, she had not lost her head.

Neither had she lost her heart, albeit she was 22, and there are young women who think if they still retain possession of their hearts up to that advanced age they are destined to hold them forever.

It may be doubted if she had a heart to lose. She had a heart, but her head went with it, and when a woman's head goes with her heart she seldom loses it. She may let it go into the keeping of a man, but that is not always losing it, as the term is generally applied among sentimentalists. She knows where it is, and it is never beyond recall. These are the sensible women of the world. Never enthusiasts, but always reliable and steady to the end, come weal or come woe, if so be that the holders of their hearts are worthy. Heroines they may be, sacrificing everything to motives higher than mere sentiment.

That Helen Hoyt was such a woman could not be said definitely, but there was evidence to that effect in the circumstance that three men were swinging uncertainly in the balance before her. This is beyond the power of the emotional enthusiast. She may have three men in the balance at three different times, but never three at one time. She chooses first and the man puts himself in the balance afterward.

As young as she was she had reasoned these things out for herself, aided and abetted somewhat by the counsel of the colonel, a man twice her age, a veteran of many emotional battles, and a ripe experience which had never been rudely shocked by matrimony.

She had seen him much oftener than the three men in the balance, and she had discussed them with him, not always directly, as if she were the interested person, but oftenest under the thin veil of a suppositious case, as is the custom of men and women whose inexperience needs a remedy which they are too diffident to ask for openly. Fortunately for such there are those who will humor them.

This afternoon Miss Hoyt sat in the quiet drawing room thinking. The colonel and she had talked a long time the day before on this, to her, all important subject, and he was to come again at 5 o'clock. To add to the interest of the colonel's visit of counsel their last talk had not been of a suppositious case, but he had made it directly personal, and she had not denied that she was the previously supposed young woman whose destiny was to be determined by question, analysis and reason.

"Ah, me," she thought, "what a study the heart is. I wonder if all women's hearts are as mine will persist in being? I know many men, but of them all it seems there is not one that fills it, and Alice, who is the dearest of girls, says there can be but one. And the colonel—well, the colonel tried to point out the way, but he seems to obscure it by his own presence. Of them all, three stand out distinctly, asking me to choose.

"My head says 'choose,' but my heart remains dumb. If it should speak, I wonder what it would say? I wonder if in all the world there is no magic touch to break its seal of silence. There stands the professor, a man much older than myself; a grave man, noble hearted and good, devoted to his scientific studies and rising in his profession; ill at ease and slow of speech in the tumult of society; manifesting his brilliancy only in some philosophical or scientific discussion with men; reserved yet loving me, he says, with an ardent and absorbing love, which must be the pledge of a happy, comfortable future.

"But is it true? Does a woman find in science and philosophy what her heart craves? Will the man who is so profoundly interested in these subjects find his wife a substitute for them? His sweetheart may be for the time, but the colonel says there is much difference between a sweetheart and a wife in most men's minds, and I wish I didn't half believe the colonel."

She laughed a short, hard laugh, and looked out of the window a moment at a man and maid as they walked slowly along, very intent upon each other.

"Sweethearts," she said, almost cynically and became thoughtful again.

"And next is the artist," her thoughts whispered to her. "The colonel says an artist is lovely to hang on the wall for ornament, but he is of uncertain value as a piece of domestic furniture. Still I like the artist very much indeed. Of course he is youthful, dreamy and an idealist, with the gaze and locks of a poet, but such things appeal to most young women as they appeal to me.

"Not to my everyday sense perhaps, but to the artistic longings that move every refined soul, and I hope I am sufficiently refined to appreciate the ideal, although I don't want to neglect the real. His slightest attention is as graceful as a sonnet; so different from the clumsy, well meant efforts of the professor; but is it sincere? Does he not study it as he would study and fashion a love ditty to me—possibly to some other girl? Men are deceivers ever. With wealth and luxuries lavished upon him he lingers on in retrospective glimpses of the past; his eyes, dimmed by the subdued, fading tints of rare old tapestries, shrink from the glare and bustre of the present.

"A career! The word has a brusque and martial sound that disturbs his reveries! Ah, if life was only a sunny morning; a canoe afloat on a placid stream with a volume of Ibsen and no clocks to tick away the time. Would it not be wiser to accept the bread, somewhat thickly cut, but well buttered, with all that science offers? The colonel says it would; and really I begin to think the colonel is a valuable counselor. The fact is I like the colonel, and when a woman likes a man she likes his advice and likes to take it, if for no other reason than to please him. Which I think is the height of unselfishness, for advice is so hard to take.

"The colonel smiled at me Sunday when the third man came down to see me. He smiled, too, as if he had found something. But he said nothing directly. I wonder if he thinks I like the third man best. John Franklin, that's a good substantial name, but John isn't quite up to it. He's a Harvard kind of a man, of the sunny, flitting, class day in June type; physically perfect, handsome, stunning, I might say, and much more he stands at the university gates with empty pockets, half soberly, half gladly, and all problematically, gazing into the great unsolved future.

"Is it my mission to help him solve the problem? Does he love me because he is young, and love is the light of youth, shining whither it will? Would he be the same in the aftertimes? Would his promise meet the fulfillment I expect—that any woman would expect? More, that any woman has the right to demand of the man to whom she gives her heart? Is he as sure as the older man? As the sweetheart of his youth fades before him, in his wife, withered by the years that wreck the beauty of so many women, will he in his strong manhood be as tender and loving as he now is?

"The colonel says a woman should not marry a man so near her own age that she should grow old before he does. The colonel, I think, is arguing for himself, because he has waited so long that he must either marry a woman twenty years younger than himself or fill a bachelor's grave. I know it, for he has told me so himself, and he says it is a dreadful thought to thus perpetuate his loneliness.

"Sometimes I feel real sorry for the colonel, because he is such a congenial, companionable, honest kind of an old fellow, who would be so nice to have around all the time. Not much romance, of course, but what's romance after the wedding day? Heigho, I wish I were like Alice. She didn't have to make a choice. The man simply appeared and the choice made itself."

Miss Hoyt arose from her chair and stretched herself as one does when waking. She hadn't thought so much in months and it made her tired without accomplishing the purpose sought. The three men were still in the balance and it showed no variation in favor of any one as against the other two. She stepped to the window as the colonel came up and rang the door bell.

"Oh," she exclaimed as he entered the room, "I don't know whether I've been sleeping or not, but I have surely had an attack of nightmare."

"Three of a kind still in your hand, eh?" he smiled, as he shook hands with her.

"Yes," she sighed.

"Then fate must hold a royal flush," he said, "to win the game."

"Can fate hold such a hand?" she asked, hopelessly almost.

"Fate makes its own decrees."

"Then why doesn't it do it in my case? It seems to leave it all to me to do."

"My dear Miss Hoyt," he said to her more gently than his usual tone of lightness and jocularity, "it is not three men you should have in your head, but one in your heart."

"But which one?" she asked, nervously, for she saw the colonel's hand tremble and his eyes were turned from her.

"I cannot tell you if you do not know," he replied; and this time his eyes looked straight into hers and she felt a heart throb she had never felt before.

* * * * *

"Isn't it funny," remarked Miss Hoyt an hour later, "that I never thought of you?"

"It's a blessing to me you didn't," he answered, "for if you had ever taken me into your head I would never have got into your heart. A woman," concluded the colonel, sententiously, but with infinite satisfaction, "doesn't need a head, any how; the man is the head of the family."

And Miss Hoyt only smiled and was content with this early assumption of authority, for her heart was at rest, and when a woman's heart is at rest it is easy to smile and be contented.—Detroit Free Press.

Reason For Coolness.

Is he suing for her love and is she spurning him?

Oh, no! He is not suing for her love.

Why, then, does despair sit upon his face and cold disdain on hers?

He is miserable because she says she wears 3 B's.

She is cold because he says he can fit her only in 5 Ds.

—New York World.

The Point of View.

So much depends upon the point of view. Take the mistress question, for instance. How are we to know that this problem is not fully as engrossing to one part of society as is the servant question to the other? It is not improbable that many a maid, harassed with the ignorance, disorder and general incompetency of her mistress, spends wakeful nights and weary days in trying to find an answer to the riddle. For all we know mistress training is quite as difficult and delicate a thing as servant training, only that we hear less about it. Sometimes, however, a glimpse into the other side is granted us and we learn something of the reverse processes.

"Sass him right back," one hotel hallboy was heard to remark to another, presumably with reference to the hotel clerk. "It's the only way. That's the way I do. Whenever he gives me any of his lip I just sasses him right back."

A grade or two higher up we find less freedom of expression, but the same lively appreciation of the situation. As a big office elevator, with its precious freight of clerks and stenographers was about to take flight one morning, a young man stepped briskly inside and inquired of the elevator boy:

"Has my boss gone up yet?"

"Nop," replied the elevator boy as he slowly got the better of the attraction of gravitation.

"Then the country's safe," rejoined the brisk young man with increased cheerfulness.

Whereat the elevator boy, knowing the thought first in the hearts of the entire company, observed solemnly:

"None of the bosses haven't gone up yet."

BARBECUE AT NIXON'S

In the spring of the year whem Sumter fell the settlers of central Texas, relieved from old fears by the disappearance of Indians from the neighborhood of Fort Park Town, scattered far and wide over the surrounding prairie and rejoiced in their full possession of the land.

"We are goin' to have a bobbycue, Hiram," said little Susie Nixon to her elder brother. "Steve and I are. Soon's Steve gets through churnin', he and I's goin' to take our dinner 'way off yonder," sweeping her arm toward the open prairie, "and stay all day. It's a bobbycue, Steve says."

"Huml There's goin' to be a bobbycue or somethin' at home to-day, Susie," whispered Hiram, with a mysterious air. "Want to see a man get the top of his head shot off? See your pa do it? Well, you just wait a while."

"I don't want to see my pa shoot the top of anybody's head off!" said the little girl, decidedly. "I don't want ma to let him!"

"Well!" exclaimed Hiram, with surprise. Fearing she might reveal to their mother the "big secret" in which he reveled Hiram hastened to erase thought of it from her mind by asking for particulars of the "bobbycue."

While 5-year-old Susie was imparting the scheme proposed by 8-year-old Steve for their picnic of two Steve appeared with the dinner pail in hand, a bottle of water and another of buttermilk. Barefooted and happy the children trudged away together and disappeared over the rising ground.

Hiram, a youth of 15, thin lipped, wide mouthed, black eyed, quivering with expectation of the duel between his father and Jerry Woodmanse, of Fort Park Town, glanced sometimes at that father, who steadfastly worked a yoke of patient oxen among the shoots of Indian corn, and again at the rising ground where Hiram looked for the appearance of the enemy.

The boy felt like expostulating with his father for working instead of keeping a sharp lookout with double barreled gun in hand, but held his peace upon reflecting that he himself would certainly see Jerry before he could come within shooting distance.

The Nixon-Woodmanse feud was one of long standing. It had almost died out after Jerry's uncle and Nixon's cousin had killed each other by simultaneous shooting, but of late it had been revived. Some meddler had carried to Hiram's stern and vindictive father a chance word from Jerry, who was given to "talking wild."

"Old mean Jerry," as Hiram called him, for reasons best known to infallible Hiram himself, had, in his turn, been told that Nixon threatened to shoot him at sight.

"I'll give him the chance," said Jerry. "There's a barbecue goin' to be at Nixon's own place, and it's goin' to be a barbecue that'll send me or Nixon up the spout. Nixon's an older man than me, an' he's got a wife and children; but when a fellow sends you word he'll take your head off with a bullet first time he sees you—you'd just like to see him do it, that's all! I told Bob Patton I was goin' over tomorrow mornin' to see him do it. So now Nixon'll be lookin' out for me, sure enough, an' I got to keep my word."

Of all this Steve and Susie knew no more than their gentle mother as they chattered on their meandering way over the rolling plain.

"Ma, she laughs, and Hiram, he laughs; they think we ain't goin' to stay all day," said Steve. "But you won't get tired 'fore sundown, will you, Susie?"

"No, sir, I won't! It's nearly dinner time now, ain't it, Steve?"

"You little goose! That's all you know 'bout time. Look there!"

He pointed out a bird's nest deep in a patch of grass, with three tiny eggs as blue as the sky above. The girl cried out as if this were the first marvel of the kind she had ever seen, and Steve was pleased with her pleasure.

They stood a long time in silence, while Susie bent over the nest. Steve's eyes were fixed on the prairie, the verge of which they had now reached. Insignificant little creatures they looked, with a waste of green around them and the great clear dome above.

"Just think! Little Indians were here once!" Steve broke the silence. "'Spect they picked flowers right here."

"I wish they'd come back!" exclaimed Susie. "I wish the big one that pa told us about would come right now. I'd tell him how 'shamed of himself he ought to be, killin' folks so. He wouldn't hurt us, would he?"

"I dunno."

Steve answered at random, for his mind was really occupied in wondering how long it would take him to get to the blue boundary line where sky and prairie met.

"Steve!" whispered Susie, creeping up to him.

"What?"

"If that Indian was to come what would you do?"

"Me?" cried Steve, waking up. "I'd just take a stick and hit him."

"Mebbe if we showed him the bird's nest," suggested Susie somewhat anxiously, "he'd not get mad. Oh, now, Steve, I know it's dinner time."

"Lemme see," and Steve considered. "If we had the horse rack here we could tell the time by its shadow, like ma does. Ma, she says when the shadow's most under the horse rack, it's noon. These here weeds' shadows are under 'em. It's noon by them. We'll eat."

They made believe their fried bacon was barbecued beef. The corn dodger needed no make believe; that was good enough. So also was the buttermilk, which they drank up—every drop. The water remained untouched, but was too precious to pour out, for Steve's father obtained his supply by bringing it by the barrel from a stream three miles away.

"Wisht I didn't have to carry this bucket an' things back," mused Steve, as he attempted vainly, not for the first time, to make the bottle go into the tin. He stood looking ruefully down at the objects, while a horseman approached from over the prairie.

"An Indian!" Susie whispered.

No, it was not an Indian, surely! The brown man's eyes had a cool twinkle of blue, and such a tight fitting, belted, homespun shirt never a red man wore! He carried, not bows and arrows, as the children believed Indians always did, but a double barreled gun, the counterpart of that which usually rested on the two deer horns above the small, square window at the children's home.

If Steve had needed further proof that this was no Indian, he had it in the fact that the man on the gray horse was a familiar sight—none other than Jerry Woodmanse.

Jerry did not give one the impression, sitting there on the horse, of being such a very "mean" man, yet he had really come out this beautiful spring morning to shoot at the children's father! They, all unaware of that purpose, looked up at him with round, bright eyes.

Susie's homespun bonnet, stiffened with thin slats of wood, fell back of its own accord, and sat on plump shoulders to make a dark background for her rosy face. Woodmanse forgot to look grim as he gazed at her.

"Why, little chips!" he cried, pleasantly. "What you 'way out here for?"

"We're havin' a bobbycue," spoke Stephen, promptly.

The man on the horse gave a start, and looked uneasily at the gun before him on the saddle.

"Ain't you afraid of snakes or nothin'? I seen a wolf this side of the timber back yonder."

Stephen, smiling, shook his head, but Susie, to the man's surprise, set up a cry, threw her arms out to him, and came near, almost under the horse's stamping feet. Woodmanse saw that she wished him to carry her immediately beyond the reach of that wolf.

"Now you'll have to take Susie home," explained Susie's brother, with a boy's superior smile at the thought of danger. "An' I wish I could get somebody to carry these old bottles and things for me. If I could just get the bottles to go in here"—he tried the impossible once more and sighed. "Couldn't you take the bottles, too?"

Jerry laughed pleasantly down at the upturned faces of his enemy's children. What engaging little ones these were! "I wish I could give you a ride, sissy," he said, "but I ain't goin' your way—least I ain't now, not exactly."

Susie looked grieved, her lower lip trembled and Stephen's face took on a deeper surprise. That any one except Hiram or himself could deny Susie was scarcely to be believed. He spoke, sternly commanding:

"You let Susie ride, sir; she wants to!"

Jerry laughed loud and long. Yes, these were certainly the finest little ones he had ever come across. As he laughed he rode slowly on, followed at a little distance by the children. Susie cried silently at his refusal to carry her, and Steve indignantly reverted to Hiram's opinion that "Old Mean Jerry" was a correct description of Woodmanse.

Jerry's laugh, as he looked back at their faces, changed to a rueful expression. He wondered whether he could not give, at least, a long lift toward home. Then the incongruity of holding in his arms the children of the man he was going to shoot came upon him with full force and he began to gallop on. At that moment a shrill shriek came from Susie; Steve, drawing his sister away from something in the grass, shouted loudly: "Rattlesnake!" and Jerry instantly turned back to their aid.

Countless living creatures called out by the spring crawled on that plain in the sunshine. Snakes were then far more numerous there than now, and the Nixon children, accustomed to see the reptiles give the path, feared them little. But this rattlesnake, first disturbed by the horse and immediately after by the youngsters, struck at Susie with but one rattle of warning.

Half way between knee and ankle, but fortunately in a part free from arteries, the fierce fangs entered. Before Woodmanse jumped down from his saddle Steve had found the two purple marks, but knew not what to do.

"It's whisky they give 'em," said the little boy to Jerry. "Just make 'em drink, Hiram says."

"First suck out the poison," said Jerry, and kneeling he applied his lips to the wounds, while little Susie pale and trembling, perhaps already affected by the quick venom, clung to Steve's arms.

"I wish I'd fetched some whisky," said Jerry, rising. "But I guess she'll be all right, Steve."

Then for a moment he gazed at the children with looks that frightened them. He was thinking whether or not it would be safe for him to approach that house over the rise even with Susie in his arms.

Suddenly she seemed to be fainting and he hesitated no longer.

Placing his gun on the ground he swung Susie to a seat before him and was off at full speed the next moment. Steve no sooner found himself alone on the spot than he was overcome by great fear for his own bare legs. Squatted, with his feet drawn beneath him, he remained peering nervously round for a long while.

By and by a wish to do vengeance on the snake brought him to his feet. Looking about him for a stick he saw Jerry's gun lying in the grass close at hand.

The boy's eyes glowed. His opportunity had come to handle a gun! He crept along in the direction the snake had taken, cautiously examining the long grass. Yes! there it lay—the snake coiled and ready for defense or attack. Steve pulled the trigger of the half cocked gun.

No deafening report followed. He tugged in vain at the trigger, grew reckless, grasped the piece by the muzzle and advanced. Long ere this Woodmanse had come into more seeming danger than threatened either boy or rattlesnake.

He had asked himself on taking up the child what if Nixon were on the lookout for him? He conceived himself dashing suddenly upon his enemy posted somewhere in front of the house ready for him and yet taken unaware by the suddenness of his approach. Would not that enemy fire hastily, not perceiving Susie nor knowing that Jerry was unarmed?

He thought also of the danger to the child should Nixon shoot recklessly at sight of the familiar gray horse. The face of the little girl lying white and quiet on his arm touched reckless Jerry's heart.

Hiram Nixon, having warned his father of Woodmanse's approach, stood chuckling in gleeful anticipation, troubled by no thought that his father could fail of the victory. Nixon himself was shocked by the lad's relish of the situation.

"I'd no idee the boy was growin' up to delight in such things," he sighed.

All this while the patient mother, unconscious of the dangers threatening her loved ones, was singing at her kitchen work in the shed room back of the double log cabin. Hiram clearly heard her song floating out into the pleasant air:

Come, Holy Spirit, heavenly Dove,
With all thy quickening powers—

He heeded not, but giving all his attention to the advancing horse he suddenly saw his little sister's face.

"Don't shoot!" he shouted. "He's got Susie. Don't shoot!"

Nixon had already distinguished his child. But his face had set the harder for that. He credited Jerry with intent to shield himself with Susie, come to close quarters and take her father at a disadvantage.

Raging with this idea, yet cool enough to take steady aim, and determined to get the better of an opponent so inhuman Dixon decided instantly to trust to his skill as a marksman. He fired at Jerry's head. Woodmanse stooped at the moment. The ball grazed his hat as he galloped on. Then upright again in the saddle he sat. Nixon discharged his second barrel.

Straight on went the gray, steadily unheeding the report of the gun, until stopped by his master directly in front of the smoking barrels.

"Struck that big, odd wooden button of my shirt," observed Woodmanse critically, "else I'd 'a' gone up the spout that last time. Say, quit foolin' right now. Your little girl'll be up the spout directly if you don't mind."

Long before he had finished his explanation the mother was beside Susie. Long before he and the slow Nixon had decided what must be done for the little girl the mother had borne her to the house and administered the contents of a brandy flask from the medicine chest.

Then the wound was dressed with last year's still green tobacco leaves and the child fell into deep sleep. Whereupon Nixon, all his vengeful feelings having been overcome by gratitude to Susie's preserver, shook hands with Jerry Woodmanse, sobbed, trembled and called on Hiram to share the better spirit.

On this scene appeared Steve, walking wearily under the burden of the gun, buttermilk flask, water bottle and tin can.

"I killed it," he announced, succinctly with an unusual gleam in his eye.

"Good enough," said his father. "Get right along in to your dinner now, Steve. Hitch your horse to the rack, Jerry, and set in with us."

"Dinner!" cried Steve. "Why, we had the bobbycue dinner long ago."

"Well, this here is my barbecue right now, Steve," said Woodmanse, laughing, "and dinner to it. I didn't expect to have any dinner to my barbecue, Steve."—Youth's Companion.

A Good Defense.

Mr. Serjeant Wilkins once defended a breach of promise case for a singularly ugly little man, which case he told the defendant, after reading his brief, must be "bounced" through. And the serjeant did bounce it through.

"Gentlemen of the jury," he said, at the close of a most eloquent speech, "you've heard the evidence for the plaintiff; and, gentlemen of the jury, you have admired the most bewitching lady, the plaintiff herself. Gentlemen, do you believe that this enchanting, this fascinating, this captivating, this accomplished lady would, for one moment, favor the advances or listen, with anything save scorn and indignation, to the amorous protestations of the wretched and repulsive homunculus, the deformed and degraded defendant?"

His client looked up from the well of the court and piteously murmured:

"Mr. Serjeant Wilkins! Oh, Mr. Serjeant Wilkins!"

"Silence, sir!" replied the Serjeant, in a wrathful undertone.

"Gentlemen," he continued, bringing his fist down heavily on the desk before him, "do you think that this lovely lady, this fair and smiling creature, would ever have permitted an offer of marriage to be made to her by this miserable atom of humanity, this stunted creature, who would have to stand on a sheet of notepaper to look over twopence?"

Instant verdict for defendant.—Tit-Bits.

Within the Law's Limit.

The game was poker and the players were men prominent in American public life. One was a statesman from Kentucky and the other Judge "Tom" Nelson of Indiana, ex-Minister to Mexico, and one of the brightest wits America has produced. A Western Senator dealt the cards. There was a careful skinning of indicators on the part of the participants, and Judge Nelson found the result such as to guarantee the advisability of chipping in. The Kentuckian did likewise with an eagerness that denoted strength in his particular direction. The other dropped out. The Kentuckian and the Hoosier each demanded a single card, and the Senator deftly flirted them off the deck. For a few minutes the betting progressed.

"Two blues better, Tom."

"Two more than you."

"I'll have to lift you about so many, Tom."

"Well, I'm sorry, but you must meet a further increase of ivories."

So it went until the Kentuckian began to doubt the efficiency of the tree ten spots he held in his left hand. There was too much in the pot to allow him to lay down, so he sighed and called the Judge, with the words:

"What have you got, Tom?"

"Queens," was the sententious response.

"How many?" queried the Kentuckian.

"One," thundered the diplomat. "Did you take me for a bigamist?"—Washington Post.

An Erroneous Impression.

They had not been married very long, and they had a good cook, but one evening when he came home to dinner he found that not a single thing was cooked properly. He had done a stroke or two of good business during the day and was naturally an easy tempered fellow, so he said nothing.

When dessert was reached his wife said to him:

"I didn't tell you before, but as a treat I cooked the whole of the dinner for you to-day myself."

"Oh, that's it, is it? I owe an apology to cook for the mental injustice which I have been doing to her all the evening."—Judy.

APRIL 1 WATERMELON.

Abundant Merriment at This Party, Despite the Storm.

Although the watermelons were not very plentiful, the "watermelon" party given by the Misses Chase of Jackson avenue to the Christian Endeavor Society of the Congregational Church last evening, was a great success.

The usual rain that accompanies any entertainment of the church was present, but could not keep away the faithful. As was to be expected on the evening of April 1, All Fool's Day tricks played a prominent part.

After all the guests had assembled and chatted together for a short time, Miss Mary Chase read a story appropriate to the occasion, telling of the stealing of a watermelon by two boys. Then Miss Chase called on all to go in search of the watermelons, or, if there were none of those, the things nearest to them. There was a general scrambling, and an energetic search for the watermelon seeds that were strewn all about the rooms and hall. Time was called at last, and when the count was taken Ernest Suffren and Robert LaBoyteaux were found to have the most. Each of them was presented with a blotter, the cover of which represented a slice of watermelon. Mrs. C L. Goodrich and Wm. Winckler received the booby prizes, eggs painted like the outside of a melon.

After further conversation, another game was played. Each person was given a letter, and was to give the name of some place commencing with that letter, and tell why he was going there, the principal word in his reason to commence with the same letter. This was the occasion of a great deal of fun, especially when one man, very prominent in church work, remarked that he was going to "Detroit to get drunk". After the excitement caused by this game had died away, all were requested to take seats, and the following was served:

Minced turkey; Plainfield chips, a la Saratoga; pressed chicken; green pease; canned corn; hash; fragments; composite compound; cedar clippings; brown extract.

The orders were given to the waitresses, and much fun followed. Those who had ordered the Plainfield chips received a dish containing a few chips of wood. A picture of a turkey cut into small pieces formed the minced turkey. Pressed chicken consisted of several small pictures of chickens on which a weight rested. Those who asked for green pease got the real thing, but oh so hard!

Canned corn was not exactly what was expected, although it answered the requirements—an ear of popcorn placed in a can. Those who were brought hash found a dish full of spools, hair-pins, breast-pins, pencils, and the like. Cedar clippings were a number of cedar toothpicks. Those who were lucky enough to call for fragments or composite compound were pleasantly fooled by receiving a large piece of cake, while the brown extract proved to be cocoa. After everyone had enjoyed the April-fool dishes, fragments and brown extract were passed to all.

The Misses Chase were assisted in serving the supper by Miss Mary Robinson, Miss Captolia Conover, and Miss Adeline Parsons. After all were served, the waitresses were seated at a table and waited on by the young men.

After another period of sociability, the party broke up, and everyone declared that a more enjoyable evening had not been spent in a long time.

Primrose & West Tonight.

In their great show in Music Hall tonight Primrose & West will be at the head of forty white and thirty colored artists, depicting the progress of minstrelsy from its birth to the present day in such a shape as to provide two separate performances during the same evening. There are two distinct first parts, each concluding with a sensational feature, and the other parts of the long bill fairly teem with good things.

There are also two military bands, one white, the other colored, both handsomely uniformed, and their advent is always calculated to gladden the ears of all lovers of music. The costuming and scenic details for the big show are said to rival the most extravagant investments in that direction ever made, even in the production of operatic splendors.

One of the principal vocal numbers is rendered by Allen May, the wonderful descriptive baritone, with stereopticon illustrations. The latest novelty is introduced, the Miller Bros' Famous Diorama, presenting incomparable scenic marvels, including their latest spectacle, Chinese warships blown up by a Japanese torpedo.

It will be an agreeable surprise to persons subject to attacks of bilious colic to learn that prompt relief may be had by taking Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. In many instances the attack may be prevented by taking this remedy as soon as the first symptoms of the disease appear. 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy, Park and North aves. THE SCHOOL BOARD MEETS.

Fire Escapes and Building Repairs the Chief Topics of Consideration.

Little business of importance was transacted at the regular April meeting of the Board of Education, held last evening.

All the members were present, and President Probasco was in the chair.

Considerable time was occupied in auditing the many monthly bills.

The matter of fire escapes for the school buildings was brought up, and after a short discussion was referred to the proper committee.

The question of school repairs came in for considerable amount of discussion, some thinking that the bills for this work were running up too high; but explanations were made and when all understood that none except necessary repairs had been made, the subject was dropped.

Collector Johnson reported $500 collected as school-tax money, the same having been deposited in the bank.

The Board made a request that the City Assessor make the rate of .45 per cent. on taxable valuation of the city property for the coming year's expenses.

It was voted to raise $4,000 this year for mortgage indebtedness. $1,405.87 was reported as having been received from County Superintendent Holmes.

Mr. Lovell, chairman of committee on teachers, stated that there was too much crowding in the schools, and suggested that an additional room be opened in the Wadsworth building and used as a kindergarten.

The need of a flag walk across the grounds at the Bryant School was reported, also that of a curb on the Sixth street side. They will be looked after by the Board.

A cement walk was reported as being laid in the Bryant School to replace the wornout board floor in the basement. It was decided that city water be placed in all the schools not having the same.

It was stated that the need of new furniture in the Wadsworth building was paramount. The matter was left with the proper committee.

Chandler Biker communicated with Board asking for consent to run the trolley through Fourth street. The Board was not inclined to sign for it, unless the company would promise not to go through Arlington avenue.

The matter will be considered, and legal advice will be obtained.

A Horse's Bad Hurt.

Thomas Redhing of Perth Amboy, a bidder on the sewer work, drove to Plainfield yesterday afternoon on business.

His left his horse and wagon at Roberts's livery stable. After transacting his business he went to the stable for his rig.

One of the boys brought it out to the entering driveway, for Mr. Redhing. The animal was a little frisky and just as the owner was getting in the carriage the horse made a plunge striking a large window on the left.

The glass cut the horse severely in the neck, causing a great loss of blood which covered the floor and partition completely.

Dr. Pocock was called and took necessary stitches in the opening.

Today the horse is getting along very nicely. It is being kept at Roberts's stable.

Marvelous Results.

From a letter written by Rev. J. Gunderman, of Dismondale, Mich., we are permitted to make this extract: 'I have no hesitation in recommending Dr. King's New Discovery, as the results were almost marvelous in the case of my wife. While I was pastor of the Baptist Church at Rives Junction she was brought down by pneumonia succeeding la grippe. Terrible paroxysms of coughing would last hours with little interruption and it seemed as if she could not survive them. A friend recommended Dr. King's New Discovery it was quick in its work and highly satisfactory in results. Sold by L. W. Randolph, druggist. Regular size, 50c. and $1; our price 45c and 90c

THE TOWN TROLLEY.

Council at Last Presents the Extension Ordinance.

CARS ARE TO COVER THE TOWN.

Various Routes Provided for the Speeding of the Electric Cars, and Many Safeguards Stipulated for the Protection and Revenue of the City — Even Through-Line Trains Must Stop at the Signal of Citizens—Successful Sewer Bidder Announced—Other Important Municipal Business.

When the Common Council last night got to business at 8:45 the sewer matter was immediately taken up, and the contract was awarded to Michael Honan & Sons of Chester, Pa., they being the lowest bidders, and having qualified with the American Surety Co. as bondsmen. Mr. Honan was present, and as soon as the result was announced he said "Good night, gentlemen, much obliged!" and left. The certified checks of the unsuccessful bidders were ordered returned.

The application of E. H. Holmes to repair his building at Second street and Madison avenue was withdrawn. The Building Committee was given power to permit W. J. Stephenson to move a shed at 125 Watchung avenue, and to permit Chas. H. Burnett to build a small addition at 229 West Front street.

James W. Jackson, for himself and for the Trustees of the Methodist Church, wrote that if there were no other protests against the assessments on the Madison avenue extension he would not object, but he wished to file objection to the inequality of assessments if there were other objectors.

Anna E. Serrell petitioned for the renewal of the city's lease of the City Court rooms in the Hetfield building, 202 West Front street, and the renewal was ordered made.

The report of the commissioners on the proposed widening of Madison avenue was filed, and the Finance Committee instructed to ascertain the city's position in regard to the assessment against it, also the city's liability for damages, etc.

Elizabeth Brandt, Jeremiah Moore, Mary D. Voorhees, and Isaac L. Moore, protested against the extension of the trolley road on Madison avenue, in addition to withdrawing their consents. (It was stated, by the way, that these withdrawals of consents did not affect the company's right of way, as the signature once made was as binding as though made to a deed.)

E. P. Thorn applied for a liquor license. The application was referred to the License Committee.

The following changes in the fire companies were confirmed: Exempted, E W Pack and J E Flannery from Gazelle, and H M Sherwin from No 2; resigned, Nicholas Myers from No 2, to become a policeman; expelled, John Kriney and Jacob Krewson from No 2.

City Judge Coddington reported 65 arrests for the quarter, and $114.50 collected in fines.

Sidewalks were ordered laid on both sides of the following thoroughfares: West Fourth street between Plainfield and Grant avenues, South avenue between Richmond street and the Netherwood station, Belvidere avenue between South and Woodland avenues, Woodland avenue between Belvidere and Watchung avenues, Watchung avenue between Hillside and Woodland avenues, and Woodland avenue between South avenue and Ravine road.

The lease of the city offices and Council chamber in the Coward Building was renewed for one year.

Thaddeus C. Smith was granted permission to erect a new building at 417 Madison avenue. Fred Caspar was given the privilege to build a side entrance at his hotel, under the supervision of the fire marshal.

$150 was authorized to be expended for the horse which has been on trial in the fire department four months.

The application of J. A. Smith & Bro., for a permit to construct the big box sign already up in front of their store, was refused, and Mr. Fisk said it would have to come down. The sign was against the ordinance, and could not be permitted to remain up in justice to others. Mr. Frazee alone voted to grant the permission. Mr. Fisk said the sign looked like a band-stand.

Mr. Ginna of the committee appointed to confer with the Citizens Organized Aid Committee said that the problem of caring for the poor was progressing.

Sec. 2. That the said company shall construct, maintain and operate a single track railway for said extension, to be laid upon the middle line of the street, and shall construct the tracks, switches, turnouts and poles in the manner and at the points and places indicated for the same on said map.

Sec. 3. That said company shall keep in repair to the satisfaction of the Committee on Streets, the paving or other surface materials of the portion of streets, roads and bridges occupied by its tracks, and in addition shall so keep in repair eighteen inches on each side of the portion of said streets, roads and bridges occupied by its tracks. In case of double tracks, or switches or turnouts, the expression "occupied by its tracks" shall be construed to mean all space in the street between the outermost rails. In case the city shall at any time determine to pave or repave any street or section of a street, the said company shall forthwith repave any portion of said street or section of street which may be occupied by the company's tracks and for eighteen inches beyond, with same material and in same manner, and shall do so at the company's expense under the supervision of the street commissioner. If said company shall at any time fail to comply with any of the requirements of this section, the work or repairs hereinabove specified may be done or made by or under the direction of said committee on streets, and to their satisfaction, and the expense thereof shall on demand be paid by said company to said city; provided that the said committee on streets or a majority of them shall give at least ten days notice in writing of the intention to do such work or make such repair, said notice to be served upon any officer or employe of said company who may be found at their office or depot.

Sec. 4. The said company and its officers, servants, agents or employes shall not, nor shall any or either of them be allowed to shovel, throw or place any snow, ice or slush alongside the said track or tracks, in any street or streets, in such manner as to obstruct other public travel therein; but, when removing said snow, ice or slush from said track or tracks, the said company or its officers, servants, agents or employes shall cause the same to be immediately levelled between said track or tracks and the gutter lines on each side thereof unless the fall of snow shall have been too heavy to make it practicable to level the same as aforesaid; in which latter case the said company shall pay its pro rata of the expense of the removal of said snow. Upon violation of any of the provisions of this section, there shall be incurred a penalty of twenty dollars for any city block on which any such violation shall take place, to be paid to the city by said company or by any of its said officers, agents or employes so offending for each and every offense.

Sec. 6. That the guage of the tracks of said company to be hereafter laid shall be four feet eight and one-half inches, and the other tracks of said company already laid may be made of the same guage. That all the cars of the said company shall be similar to those now in use by it or such as shall be approved by the common council of said city. Sec. 7. That said company shall on or before the first day of August, 1895, equip each street railway car by it operated or run within the city of Plainfield, with fenders of the most improved pattern, to be selected by a commission of 3 appointed by the Mayor, and so attached to the car as best to protect from injury persons or vehicles using the streets or riding on the said cars; that after said last mentioned date no street railway car, the motive power of which is electricity, shall be operated or run upon any of the streets of said city, unless such car is equipped with fenders as above required, and in case any such car is operated or run contrary thereto the said company and every person or persons who shall either as president, manager, conductor or motorman or otherwise be engaged in so operating or running any such car shall be deemed to have violated this section and on conviction shall forfeit and pay fifty dollars for each day during which such violation shall continue, not exceeding one hundred dollars in any one conviction.

Sec. 8. If the said company shall fail to build or construct its extension in Fourth street from Madison avenue to Grant avenue within six months from the time when so directed by the common council, or shall fail to build or construct the remaining extensions herein provided for with turnouts and switches in the manner aforesaid, and put the same into complete operation for the transportation of passengers within nine months next after the passage of this ordinance, or shall afterwards fail or neglect to operate the same as aforesaid daily and every day, for the space of three consecutive months, all the rights, powers and privileges and every one of them of said company, their successors or assigns, under and by virtue of this supplemental ordinance, shall thereupon cease and determine, and this ordinance shall be null and void so far as the grant of any such right, power and privilege to said company is concerned, and in either of such cases the common council expressly reserve the right to cause the said railroad or any part or parts thereof, so constructed, to be removed from said street or streets, or any of them, and to sell and dispose of the materials thereof by public auction, and, after paying all the expenses of such removal and sale and of repairing the said street or streets, and of restoring the same nearly as possible to its or their original condition, to pay the balance of the proceeds of such sale to the said company, or its successors or assigns, provided, that no notice of such sale shall be required to be given, other than an advertisement, signed by the city clerk, and published in any one or more newspapers printed and published in said city.

The time during which the said company shall be delayed in the prosecution of its work or in the operation of its road or in any section thereof by injunction or other legal proceedings in the courts of New Jersey, or the federal courts in New Jersey, shall not be included within the nine months within which the said extensions are to be constructed and put into complete operation.

Sec. 9. That the said company shall for each and every mile of track laid already or that shall hereafter be laid, whether under the provisions of the ordinance hereinabove referred to, approved April 27, 1891, or the amendment thereof approved May 4, 1892, or under the ordinance entitled "An Ordinance authorizing the Plainfield Street Railway Company to extend the location of its tracks", approved Oct. 4, 1892, or under this ordinance, or under any other ordinance, and also for every mile of track that may be owned or operated or that may hereafter be owned or operated by said company within the limits of the city of Plainfield, pay or cause to be paid to the collector of taxes of said city for the use of the said city, the following sums, to wit: For the year beginning Jan. 1, 1896, fifty dollars a mile; for the year beginning Jan. 1, 1897, seventy-five dollars a mile; for the year beginning Jan. 1, 1898, seventy-five dollars a mile; for the year beginning Jan 1, 1899, one hundred dollars a mile; for the year beginning Jan. 1, 1900, one hundred dollars a mile; for the year beginning Jan. 1, 1901, one hundred and twenty-five dollars a mile, for each and every mile of track; said payments to be made each and every year in advance. For the years succeeding that beginning 1901 the said company shall pay at the same rate as for the year 1901, provided that when the gross receipts in any one year from the entire system within the city of Plainfield and the borough of North Plainfield shall equal or exceed eighty thousand dollars, then for that year and annually thereafter, the said company shall pay annually to said city collector for the use of said city five per cent. of the gross earnings of said company, and said gross earnings shall be construed to include all earnings of said company and full proportion on all earnings on through traffic to be calculated according to the proportion between the entire length of the journey and the number of miles travelled within the limits of the city of Plainfield or the borough of North Plainfield or both as the case may be. That to enable the city to ascertain from time to time the amount of gross earnings of said company the books of the company shall be open to inspection by the finance committee of the common council or such other person or persons as the common council shall for that purpose designate.

Sec. 10. That the tracks and cars of said company shall be used for the carrying of passengers only; that no freight shall be carried by said company or over its tracks, and that no luggage other than hand luggage actually carried by passengers shall be carried or allowed upon the cars of said company or any other cars passing over said tracks. Sec. 12. That said company upon the final adoption of this ordinance and before exercising any of the rights and privileges granted hereby, shall as a condition precedent file with the city clerk of the city of Plainfield a contract to be executed by said company and duly approved by the corporation counsel, wherein said company covenant and agree with the inhabitants of the city of Plainfield, to abide by and perform all the matters and things herein, on the part of said company required to be observed, kept and performed; that it will, at any and all times hereafter, fully indemnify and protect the city of Plainfield of and from any and all suits, actions and proceedings that may be brought and maintained, or sought to be brought and maintained, by any person or corporation for, on account of or by reason of, the adoption or maintenance by said company, its successors or assigns, of said electric system aforesaid, or the construction or maintenance of said electric system or anything connected therewith, or any act of omission or commission by said company, its successors or assigns or any of its agents or servants, at any time or times, and shall whenever requested by said city, fully defend any and every such action, suit or proceeding.

Sec. 13. That said company shall also at the same time herein above specified for filing said contract, file a bond to the city in the sum of twenty thousand dollars to be approved as to form by the common council and corporation counsel of said city, conditioned for the full and faithful keeping, observance and performance of the terms and conditions in this ordinance contained, on part of said company to be kept, observed or performed. And in case the conditions or terms upon which said company is granted permission to locate its tracks and maintain and operate its road or any of the terms or conditions of the said contract are violated, the city reserves the right to revoke the permission herein granted, to remove the tracks of the said company and all the constructions made in the streets of the city by the said company, its successors or assigns.

Sec. 14. The company shall file with the city clerk, within thirty days next after the passage of this ordinance, their acceptance, under their corporate seal and signed by their president, of the terms and provisions, restrictions, and regulations hereof, and every one of them, and, in default thereof, it shall be understood and held that they decline to accept the same, and thereupon all rights, powers and privileges, to them granted hereby, shall forever cease and be at an end, in the same manner and with the same effect as if this ordinance had never been passed.

The associations throughout the State were well represented, and the session was a lively one.

Physical Director D. A. MacPhie was there for Plainfield.

Orange, Newark, New Brunswick and Plainfield were very anxious to secure the meet. Mr. MacPhie, however, came home feeling assured that Plainfield would get it.

One objection raised to Plainfield was the distance from the railroad station to the athletic grounds, but Mr. MacPhie promised that satisfactory transportation would be arranged to suit all.

The question will be settled at the next meeting, which will be held in two weeks.

Their Ballots Play an Important Part in the Result of the Election—Democrats Elect Their Mayor and Entire City Ticket—The Election in Ohio.

Bridgeport, Conn., April 2.—The democrats elected Frank E. Clark mayor, yesterday, and the entire democratic ticket by about 600 majority. Payne and Young, A. P. A., candidates for the board of education, defeated Kinsley and Cogswell by 500 votes. More than 2,000 women voted and the tickets were badly scratched. Paine and Young were on the regular republican ticket.

The A. P. A. Fight.

The bitter fight between the A. P. A., and its opponents, on the board of education, was between Wren and Miller, two democrats, and two A. P. A. candidates. The democrats won receiving a large vote, the majority of 2,000 women voters casting their ballots for them instead of for Kinsley and Cogswell, independent republicans, whom the democratic candidates have been helping and whom it was expected the women would support.

Republican Losses.

The anti A. P. A., faction is celebrating the victory of Clark over Strong. The republican vote fell off in several of their strongholds, and the democrats made gains in most of theirs, the Sixth ward giving 600 majority. City Clerk Mullins and Tax Collector Mooney were re-elected. License was carried by increased majority.

LIGHT VOTE IN OHIO.

The democrats elected Tansey mayor at Middletown. Hamilton was swept by the democrats. The democrats carried their ticket at Columbus. At Toledo the democrats elected the mayor and most of the city ticket. It was the first general election where women could vote, and the privilege was taken advantage of generally. In most instances where women were candidates for the school board they were elected. No disturbances of consequence are reported.

The Identity of the Colored Woman Not Yet Established.

New York, April 1.—The identity of the colored woman whose dismembered body was found early Sunday morning at Sixth avenue and Waverly place has not yet been established, although the police officials are diligently at work on the case. Many colored people have viewed the remains at the morgue and several have expressed the belief that the woman might have been so and so but when each clue was investigated it proved wrong. The stewardess at the Hoboken depot of the D. L. & W. railway identified the body as that of a woman who came in on a train Tuesday forenoon. She told the stewardess she came from Heathsville, Va., and was going to New York to visit an acquaintance in Thompson street. As Thompson street is near the spot where the body was found, the police have decided to search every house on that street.

Scranton, Pa., April 2.—A singular case of superstition affecting several hundreds of people appeared here yesterday. Some time ago a woman mind reader predicted there would be an explosion in the Saquoit silk mills, by which a hundred of the girls employed there would be killed. Six hundred girls yesterday quit work almost as soon as the mill opened. The dread of the impending explosion spread to the hands at work in the Meadow Brook silk mill, the Harvey silk mill and a button and woolen factory near by and mill hands from these establishments quit work for the day, making a total of 1,300 people who lost a day's wages by the silly prediction of a charlatan.

Suspicious Vessels.

Progreso, Yucatan, April 2.—A fishing bark just in from the Gulf of Mexico reports having encountered two unknown vessels heavily armed with cannon and apparently well equipped with all the munitions of war. When hailed the boats made no reply, and the fishermen, being afraid to make any further advances, made their escape from the locality as fast as possible. It is thought the vessels have some connection with the Cuban revolution, although it is reported that piratical craft manned by renegade Cubans are coasting about the waters of the gulf and along the coast of South America.

The insurgents defeated the Spanish troops on both occasions. The Spaniards left their dead on the field and retreated in good order. The dead, it is stated, numbered forty-nine in both days' fighting.

Not of the Fighting Kind.

According to the advices the soldiers recently sent from Spain, called volunteers, most of whom are mere boys, are conscripts. Their hearts are not in the fight, and there have been many desertions, and the soldiers have gone over to the insurgents. Two regiments were sent to the country three days after their arrival in Havana. Fifty so-called Spanish volunteers recently arrived from Spain deserted, and are with the insurgent General Palacio.

Rebels Making a Firm Stand.

New York, April 2.—A passenger on the Ward line steamer Yumuri, just arrived from Havana, stated that the situation on the south side of Cuba was of a serious nature. The government was sanguine of its ability to suppress the insurrection. Two thousand Spanish troops had just arrived from Spain at Santiago, and 6,000 more were expected soon. The revolutionists were, however, making a firm stand in some small towns in the province of Santiago.

THEY OPPOSED REFORM.

Two More New York City Police Commissioners Must Go.

New York, April 2.—Mayor Strong announced late last evening that he would remove Police Commissioners Murray and Kerwin in the course of a day or two unless they handed in their resignations in the meantime. The mayor gave as his reason for making the vacancies in the police board that the commissioners mentioned have opposed reform in the department. The mayor has sent letters to United States civil service commissioner Theodore Roosevelt and ex-United States district attorney Edward H. Mitchell, requesting them to accept the offices of police commissioners.

A damage suit was brought for $10,000 and the Wabash company offered to compromise for $3,600. The matter was not settled until Mr. Gould learned of the suit and promptly offered to make up the difference between $3,600 and $5,200, the widow's demand.

Against the Bible in the School.

Scranton, Pa., April 2.—By a decision of Judge Gunster just delivered in the Waverly borough school case, the reading of the Bible in the public schools of Pennsylvania was practically declared illegal. In his opinion, Judge Gunster said that denominational religious exercises and instruction in sectarian doctrines have no place in our system of common school education.

HE PUTS IT STRONGLY.

But He Simply Echoes the Thought of Thousands.

THERE IS THE RING OF TRUTH AND SINCERITY IN HIS WORDS.

And He Will Be Believed By All Who Read What He Says.

The sincere words of truth are what the world wants.

No one can read the following earnest words and not be struck with their truthful sincerity. We have no doubt also that they echo what is in the minds and hearts of thousands The young man who uttered them, Samuel W. Thompson, is one of the brightest and best known of the many bright young men of Abington, Mass.

"I thank God," he said, "that at last a cure has been found for nervous diseases. They are certainly the most terrible of all disorders, for they affect the mind and depress the spirits as well as weaken and exhaust the body.

"I was almost crazy at times, I was so nervous, weak, sleepless and discouraged

"I tried doctors and medicines, but never found relief for more than a few days, and then the troubles would come on again worse than ever.

"Finally I heard of Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, and I used it, and now I am perfectly well again. I owe it all to this wonderful medicine, and I say with all my heart, God bless Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, for I would have been in my grave but for it. Raised, as it were, from the dead, and alive and well! Only think of it, friends.

MR. SAMUEL W. THOMPSON.

"I have gained ten pounds in weight and am feeling strong and vigorous. It is indeed the remedy that cures, and I think it the king of all medicines. I cannot express thanks enough for the wonderful good it has done me.

Mr. Thompson is certainly an earnest believer in this wonderful discovery of Dr. Greene, Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, and he has reason to be. Nervous diseases are the most terrible of affections and lead to insanity, paralysis, heart failure or complete nervous and physical prostration. Whatever will cure nervous disorders and save people from these awful results, is the greatest discovery possible to be made.

This great remedy does cure. It does give strength and vigor to the nerves and restores vitality to the blood and body. It cures, and this is exactly what the people want. And they especially want it at this season of the year, for this grand spring tonic and invigorator is necessary if one would keep in perfect health.

Dr. Greene, its discoverer, is the most successful specialist in curing all forms of nervous and chronic diseases. His office is at 35 West 14th st., New York city, where he can be consulted without charge. Those who cannot call at the office can have consultation by letter free.

WITH GREAT INTEREST

Decision in the Income Tax Law Awaited.

Failure of the Court Yesterday To Hand Down an Opinion Caused Very Evident Disappointment to a Brilliant Array of Legal Authorities and Others Present.

Washington, April 2.—The decision in the income tax case was not handed down by the supreme court yesterday. Many distinguished persons from various parts of the country were present in anticipation of a decision, and there was a great struggle for standing room in the place set apart for spectators. The court room was kept closed to the general public for several hours, but as soon as the doors were opened there was a general rush for every available seat in the chamber. There can be no decision now until April 8.

Feverish Interest Manifest.

While there was no absolutely substantial ground for any decided impression that the constitutionality of the income tax would be determined by a decision from the supreme court judges yesterday there was a very evident disappointment among prominent legal authorities and others who have been devoting earnest attention to the matter, that there was no voicing of the court's opinion. When the hour arrived for announcing decisions, the presence of a more than ordinary attendance of leading lights in jurisprudence at the bar of the court signalized the prevailing almost feverish interest felt in the forthcoming opinion.

A Distinguished Gathering.

This gathering included three cabinet officers, their personnel representing one ex-attorney-general and two ex-secretaries of the treasury, Garland, Boutwell and Bristow respectively. The United States senate was represented by Mr. Morrill and the well-recognized ability of the bar of the District of Columbia was represented by many prominent Washington attorneys.

Speculation on the Decision.

The non-presentation of a decision on the leading question before the court has developed increased speculation as to what the opinion, when it is ready, will actually be and whether parts of the law may come under the ban of constitutionality, leaving other sections beyond any measure of legal cavil touching their accord with the constitution. These speculations, it may be said just now, are based entirely upon the opinions of lawyers and others versed in matters of jurisprudence and have not a single iota of expression beyond these outside authorities to sustain them.

IRISH POLITICAL PRISONERS.

The Release of O'Callaghin and McCann Announced in the House.

London, April 2.—Herbert Asquith, home secretary, announced in the house of commons last evening that the Irish political prisoners O'Callaghan and McCann had been released. Mrs. Aubrey has agreed to allow her husband to have the custody of the two children two months each year and to communicate with them all times. It is said that money entered into the settlement and that Aubrey will join Richard Mansfield's company next season.

WHISKY TRUST SWINDLE.

Efforts Begun to Break the Cattle Feeding Contracts.

Chicago, April 2.—Attorney John J. Herrick, counsel for the whiskey trust receivers, filed in the United States court a petition asking for the annulment of the cattle feeding contract made with Nelson Morris by the company. As a supplementary proceeding to this to-morrow there will be filed a suit to recover nearly $1,000,000 from Mr. Morris and Joseph B. Greenhut, this being the sum, it is alleged in the bill, the stockholders were mulcted of by irregularities in the slop contract mentioned.

Only a Beginning of the Suits.

It is stated that this suit will only be the precursor of others to recover large sums said to be due the holders of stock because of the difference in contracts let by the Greenhut party to themselves or their friends, and what might have been received had the contracts been let in a regular way.

Greenhut Shared in the Profits.

The most sensational allegation made in the petition which Judge Grosscup granted the receiver leave to file is that President Greenhut was a sharer in the profits made by the Nelson Morris contract to the extent of one-seventh and that he called the meeting at which the contract was let and favored it in every possible way. It is further charged that this contract was a losing one for the company. The charge is made that the 15,000 head of cattle that were fed on slops were the property of Morris and Greenhut.

Would Cause a Further Loss.

Morris claimed the right to have these cattle fed until June 1 of each year and to October 1, if the distilleries continued to operate. To continue all the distilleries until June 1 as the contract provides, the petitioner alleges, would afford a great loss and hardship to the company, as it would be advisable to shut many of them down sooner. Without running all the distilleries it would be impossible to fulfil the contract.

Suing His Own Company.

It is further set forth that Morris has brought suit to recover alleged damages of $550,000 for a breach of contract by the company, which suit is now pending and undetermined. As Greenhut is accused of being Morris' partner in the contract, the intimation is plain that he was practically a party to a suit against his own company, whose interests as president he was supposed to protect.

HORSEWHIPPED IN THE STREET.

A Camden Operator's Punishment for Deceiving a Young Woman.

Camden, N. J., April 2.—A woman slashing a man across the head and shoulders with a horsewhip attracted a crowd on Federal street, near Front, shortly before noon. The man who was whipped is Mortimor H. Raker, a telegraph operator employed by the Pennsylvania Railroad company in Camden. The woman who plied the whip is known as Tillie Toodles. The story told by the infuriated Tillie after she had put Baker to flight with her whip, was that he had been paying attention to her for the past year and had promised to marry her. She claims that May 15 had been fixed for the wedding day, but to her astonishment she recently received a call from a woman who said she was Baker's wife. After this interview Tillie prepared for revenge.

MRS. PARAN STEVENS ILL.

One Report, Which Is Denied at Her House, Said She Was Dying.

New York, April 2.—Mrs. Paran Stevens, the well-known society leader, was taken sick at a musicale at the house of a friend which she attended a few days ago, and has since been confined to her home at Fifty-seventh street and Fifth avenue. It was rumored this morning that she was suffering from apoplexy and that she was dying. Mrs. Stevens, it was said, was much excited over the closing of the Victoria hotel, in which she is financially interested. At Mrs. Stevens' house to-day it was denied that she was suffering from anything worse than a bad cold.

All arrangements have been made for the sittings, which the president is to give to Ives, and the artist will begin work immediately on his arrival. Mr. Ives is 30 years old.

Denver, Col., April 2.—The Colorado legislature has adjourned. Representative Clara Cressingham is the author of the first law to be introduced in the legislature by a woman—an act placing a bounty of $1 per ton on beet sugar. The second law to pass, whose author is a woman, is one by Mrs. Holly, making the age of consent in males 14 years and females 19 years.

The Pamir Question.

CRIME OF A MOTHER

A Columbus, O., Woman Murders Her Children.

Cut the Throats of Two in a Hotel—The Life of the Eldest, 13, Spared Because She Plead So Hard—Extraordinary Composure of the Woman After Arrest—She Is Surely Insane.

Columbus, O., April 2.—Two small children were found dead in bed in a room in the Park hotel last evening with their throats cut from ear to ear. On Saturday a neatly dressed woman came to the hotel, accompanied by three children, and registered as Mrs. H. H. B. Williams and children, Grove City, Ohio. The children were Harry Williams, aged 7; Maud Williams, aged 12, and Annie, aged 13. It was the two younger children who were found dead. They were assigned to a room with two beds.

Murdered Her Children.

Annie and her mother occupied one of the beds, and the two younger children the other. Some time during the night it is supposed Mrs. Williams murdered the children and covered their bodies with the bedding. Annie Williams says her mother left the room about 6.30 o'clock in the morning, but before going told her not to go near the bed in which her brother and sister were. She obeyed, and so it was not until the chambermaid came to make the beds that the tragedy was discovered. There was found at the foot of the bed a razor with which the bloody work was done.

Chatted Pleasantly with a Friend.

The police found Mrs. Williams at 10 o'clock last night at the house of Mrs. Lester, a friend. She had gone directly there from the Park hotel, and had told nothing of what she had done. Mrs. Lester said she had chatted pleasantly during her stay, as if nothing had happened.

Calmly Told of the Crime.

When asked about the murder, she admitted that she had killed the children and calmly related the story of how she did it, evidently not realizing the seriousness of it. She said she concluded to do it last Wednesday and came to this city to carry out her plan. She bought the razor in this city last Saturday. She bought a quantity of opium on Sunday and administered some to each of the children, but they all ejected it except Annie, who slept for several hours, and then came from under its influence.

Annie Pleaded So Hard.

She fully intended to kill Annie, but she pleaded so hard, and showed such strength of resistance that she desisted. Maud, she says, died from the morphine but this cannot be true. When she left the hotel she started for the river intending to drown herself, but she reflected that Annie might be suspected of killing the children and so she abandoned the notion of suicide in that way. She says she will kill herself yet. The woman is undoubtedly insane. She is locked up in the city prison now.

Mobbed an ex-Roman Priest.

Buffalo, April 2.—A man named Koehler, who has been posing as an ex-Roman Catholic priest, but who has been recently unmasked as an impostor in that line, and who has been spending a term in the Erie county penitentiary as a vagrant and thief, lectured or tried to lecture at Depew last evening on "My great deliverance, or why I left the Roman Catholic church." The hall where he was to lecture was crowded when Koehler came on the stage and before he could utter a word riot broke loose. Stones were thrown, revolvers discharged and a general stampede followed. Koehler escaped and no one was seriously injured.

Samuel J. Lee Dead.

Charleston, S. C., April 2.—Samuel J. Lee, colored, who succeeded the notorious Franklin J. Moses as speaker of the house of representatives of this state in 1872, died here yesterday of heart disease. Lee was born in Abbeville county, and was the slave of General Sam McGowan, a distinguished confederate general, and was his body servant, and served with him throughout the war, after having been wounded.

Steam Yacht Race Postponed.

Philadelphia, April 2.—The steam yacht race between the Yankee Doodle and the Norwood, which was scheduled to be held on the Hudson river on May 30, has been postponed until June 22. The extension of time is merely an accommodation to all concerned, as on June 29 the Yankee Doodle races the Vamoose, Rex and Mariette on Long Island sound.

Trusted Cashier Goes Wrong.

Elmira, N. Y., April 2.—Benjamin O. Scudder, a trusted cashier in the auditor's office of the Elmira, Cortland & Northern railroad company, was arrested last night charged with grand larceny. The amount of his supposed defalcation is not yet known.

His Business Interrupted.

Newark, N. J., April 2.—In the criminal court Carl Hoecking, who made a business of first marrying women with money and then swindling them out of it, pleaded guilty to swindling Annie Gebhart out of $1,100, and was sentenced to state prison for three years.

TOWN AND HOME FAVORITE.

THOSE WONDERFUL PARKS.

The Entire Whist World Amazed at North Plainfield's Phenomenal Four.

(From The Philadelphia Public Ledger.)

The A. W. L. trophy series produced another surprise on Saturday, when the Park Club of Plainfield defeated the Philadelphia Whist Club by three points. The Quaker City organization presented the same four that by scientific whist and clever team-play has placed its club in the lead in the local championship series. The Park Club was represented by the same four that conquered Hamilton a week ago, so that this quartette has now succeeded in downing the two leading Philadelphia teams—teams that a week ago would have been picked by many as the two strongest in the East.

The Park Club players on Saturday played the same style of game that won for them the previous week, thoroughly appreciating the value of four trumps for leading purposes, and taking sure ones rather than possible twos.

Owing to the ill-health of two members of the Philadelphia team it was not at its best as may be readily attested by a revoke, an exposed card, etc., during the contest. The result of this game has made it all the more apparent that The Ledger was right one week ago in urging the Plainfield organization that it was its duty to be one of the clubs to represent Eastern Whist Clubs at the Minneapolis congress.

The games to come in the A. W. L. series will all now be regarded with the greatest interest, especially as within the last few days three new challengers have appeared, to wit: Knickerbocker, of New York; Amrita, of Poughkeepsie, and American, of Boston.

The season ends with the month of April, but the Park, Philadelphia, Albany and Continental Clubs, who, prior to Saturday, were the leading challengers, all with the spirit of good fellowship and courtesy which has always distinguished the leading whist clubs of the country, last week agreed to play at least every Saturday, so as to give Hamilton, the next challenger, a show before the time limit expired.

This was the treatment due Hamilton, in view of the fact that it was the holder, that it has adopted the same policy, and thus given the Park, Albany and Continental Clubs a chance to play, which, had Hamilton in each case insisted upon the time limit, they would not have had.

Now Hamilton is once more among the challengers upon the list, and is anxious to join with Park, Albany and Continental in straining every effort to give all that desire to play a chance.

It is probable that the matches will be as follows:

April 6, Park vs. Albany.
April 13, Winner vs. Continental.
April 20, Winner vs. Hamilton.
April 27, Winner vs. Knickerbocker.

This leaves Amrita and American without a Saturday for a date, but it is possible that these games may be worked in on some mid-week day. At least everything will be done to bring this about, and the late challengers will be shown that they are not only playing against thorough whist players, but true sportsmen as well.

In the score of Saturday's game it will be noticed that the Park Club got the tricks when they were needed.

"A Midsummer-Night's Dream."

"A very good piece of work, I assure you, and a merry!"—was Nick Bottom's comment when told that "Pyramus and Thisbe" was to be the play in the festivities arranged in honor of the Duke's marriage, in the "Midsummer-night's Dream".

The remark is as true of the whole play as of the interlude, and there is no more delightful entertainment in the whole of Shakespeare.

Mr. Underhill is at his best in this play, and will no doubt be greeted by a large audience in the Casino, Thursday night, when he will appear under the auspices of the King's Daughters.

—Joseph Flack has secured a position as driver for Baker Voehl.

—Putnam & DeGraw announce a gift of $100, in their ad today.

—At the assignee's sale at Schepflin, Schultz & Co, 318 West Front street, they are offering children's knee pants from 18 cents up.

Those who never read the advertisements in their newspapers miss more than they presume. Jonathan Kenison, of Bolan, Worth Co., who had been troubled with rheumatism in his back, arms and shoulders, read an item in his paper about how a prominent German citizen of Fort Madison had been cured. He procured the same medicine, and to use his own words, "It cured me right up." He also says: A neighbor and his wife were both sick in bed with rheumatism. Their boy was over to my house and said they were so bad that he had to do the cooking. I told him of Chamberlain's Pain Balm and how it had cured me, he procured a bottle of it and it cured them up in a week. 50 cent bottles for sale at Reynolde's Pharmacy, Park and North aves. T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

THE CHARM OF MUSIC.

A Casino Audience Delightfully Entertained by King's Daughters' Artists.

A very friendly and altogether charming entertainment was the musicale given under the patronage of the Charity Circle of King's Daughters in the Casino last evening. The arrangement of the stage was entirely new to Plainfield for an affair of this kind. Instead of contalding ungraceful furniture and forbidding stage settings, the platform was transformed into a music-room which contained nothing hareb nor inharmonious. The furniture, drapery, flowers, palms, and lights, seemed as if they were the choicest to be secured from the luxurious homes of the King's Daughters; and they probably were.

There seemed no formality in connection with the presentation of the programme. It was as if the stage were an alcove in a commodious music-room, and the performers friends whose talent was shown in a friendly way to chosen guests. Those present represented the best known of local society people, and many more from towns nearby.

The programme was light and gay in composition throughout, and was opened by Oscar Franklin Comstock, who sang an old English song. Mr. Comstock's later songs, "Ideale" and "Serenata", by Tosti, were more enjoyed, perhaps, than this. Mrs. Lewis Sayre Burchard's selections on the piano were thoroughly enjoyed and appreciated, each one, it seemed, more than its predecessor. Her touch was firm and likewise lithesome, while the expression was equally fascinating. The songs which were sung by Mrs. William Burger Boorum had a peculiar charm to the audience. The nursery ditties were sweetly plaintive in words and music. Mrs. Boorum's closing selection, "Spring Flowers", Reinecke, in which she was accompanied on the violin by Miss Bertha S. Bucklin, seemed to demonstrate the qualities and power of her voice more than any other.

Miss Bucklin's violin playing was a revelation to the audience, and a wonderfully attractive one, likewise. Like the others, she played without notes, but with an accuracy, expression and power which few women exhibit in performances on the violin. The several numbers which brought Miss Bucklin before the audience were the choicest bits upon the programme, and those present testified their appreciation by firmly insisting upon an encore to each one.

Nelson Hated to Retreat.

April 2 is the anniversary of Nelson's victory over the northern powers at Copenhagen (1801). Nelson was vice admiral under Sir Hyde Parker, who got scared when he saw his lieutenant rushing the van into the thick of the enemy's fleet, under the guns of his shore batteries, and hoisted on the flagship a signal for retreat. Some of the ships obeyed the order at once. The Amazon backed off and presented her stern to the Danish guns. Her gallant captain, Riou, was cut in two by a ball and the vessel terribly riddled. When Nelson's signal officer reported the signal to haul off to his chief, the old hero repeated the words,

LORD NELSON.

"Leave off action," bitterly, and added, "Now, d—n me, if I do." Finding that his own signal for close action was still flying, he said to the signal officer, "Mind you, keep it so!" Then, turning to the captain of his flagship, using the stump of his lost arm to emphasize the words, he said, "You know, Foley, that I have only one eye and have a right to be blind sometimes." Putting the glass to his blind eye, he swept the line of vessels behind and exclaimed: "I really do not see the signal. D—n the signal anyway! Keep mine for closer action flying. Yes, nail it to the mast. That's the way I answer signals to 'leave off action.'" After an hour more of fighting the Danes began to lower their colors, and their batteries ceased firing. Nelson at once sat down and wrote to the Danish prince offering terms. A wafer was handed him to seal the letter with, but he ordered a candle brought from the hold of the ship and affixed a large wax seal. "This is no time to appear hurried or informal," he explained, with exasperating coolness. The terms were accepted and the erratic hero was fully pardoned for his flagrant disobedience of orders. In fact, Sir Hyde Parker is scarcely mentioned in the English annals of the victory at Copenhagen.

TORTURED FOR YEARS.

A Fireman's Battle With Rheumatism.

How He Conquered the Disease After Years of Misery.

Henry Wagner, assistant engineer at Fire Station No. 5, Cleveland, Ohio, says: "For the past nine years I have had rheumatism at intervals and suffered greatly. I would be off duty from ten days to two weeks each time, and although I tried many different so-called remedies, could not obtain any relief. When I first heard of the remarkable cures Munyon's Rheumatism Cure was making I was very skeptical, but just about then I had a bad attack and concluded to give them a trial. The first bottle relieved me very much, and by the time I had taken the second bottle I was completely cured. I have not had a rheumatic pain since, although I have been wet many times. Now I use Munyon's Remedies in my home and find them most excellent."

Munyon's Rheumatism Cure is guaranteed to cure rheumatism in any part of the body. Acute or muscular rheumatism cured in from one to five days. It never fails to cure sharp, shooting pains in the arms, legs, sides, back or breast, or soreness in any part of the body in from one to three hours. It is guaranteed to promptly cure lameness, stiff and swollen joints, stiff back and all pains in the hips and loins. Chronic rheumatism, sciatica, lumbago or pain in the back are speedily cured.

Munyon's Homoeopathic Home Remedy Co. of Philadelphia put up specifics for nearly every disease, which are sold by all druggists, mostly for 25c. a bottle.

Those who are in doubt as to the nature of their disease should address Professor Munyon, 1505 Arch st., Philadelphia, giving full symptoms of their disease. Professor Munyon will carefully diagnose the case and give you the benefit of his advice absolutely free of all charge. The Remedies will be sent to any address on receipt of retail price.

ANOTHER INDUSTRY.

Plainfield to Have the Only Chamois-Skin Finishing Plant in the United States.

Within the course of a few weeks ground will be broken on the land situated between Evons station and Rock avenue, on South Second street, for the erection of an immense chamois-skin finishing plant. For some time New York capitalists have been considering the investment of money in such a plant, and last week, through the real-estate agency of Bacon & Vail, a deal was consummated whereby the promoters have purchased 800 feet of ground fronting on South Second street, from the New Jersey Land Improvement Company, with the privilege of buying 400 feet additional when desired.

Plans for the erection of buildings necessary to conduct the business are now in the hands of New York architects, and as soon as finished will be put into the hands of contractors, who will immediately break ground for the structures.

This will be the only factory of its kind in the United States, and will in all probability give employment to a large number of Plainfield people, especially young women.

Bold Deeds of War In a Wild Canyon.

On March 28, 1862, Sibley's Confederate invaders made the last stand in New Mexico. Scarcely an echo of the little war between the volunteers of the border resounded through the country, but the contest was heroic and sanguine for all that. On the 28th Sibley's Texans and a force of Colorado volunteers, called "Pike's Peakers," met in Apache canyon. The Confederates chose the battle-ground and stationed their fieldpieces in the woods, with riflemen secreted among the trees. A deep, narrow canyon offers a poor field for regular battle, and this affair might have ended in a bloodless draw had the antagonists been other than borderers, men eager for the fray. The Colorado troops led off by stealing among the trees along the steep sides of the canyon and shooting at the Confederate gunners while their own artillery and infantry marched down the bed of the valley. No hazard was too great for the Texans to hold up these dangerous flankers. Led by Colonel Scurry, the Fourth cavalry, on foot, deployed across the canyon, from brink to brink, and rushed forward, with their bowies and pistols drawn. The fight they opened was one of man against man. A deadly hand to hand struggle raged in the gulch for a few moments, in which the Pike's Peakers got the worst of it, although they were at home in a rough and tumble battle. One of the Confederate detachments, led by Major Shropshire and Captain Shannon, routed the enemy in their front, and carried away by the elation of the moment made a dash for the Union batteries. The major and captain outstripped their followers. A Pike's Peaker named Pearce, who had retreated no farther than the nearest large tree, sprang out single handed and shot the major dead. Seizing the sword of the dead man, he turned on Captain Shannon, disarmed him and marched back to headquarters with the prisoner. Another private soldier, but a regular, however, belonging to the battery, performed equally gallant service. His piece stood in the bottom of the gulch opposite the enemy's cannon. With one shot he dismounted a Confederate gun, striking it full in the muzzle. A second shot disabled another gun, and a third struck and blew up a tinder box. Everywhere the fight was savage. Few prisoners were taken, and the dead outnumbered the wounded. The greatest slaughter fell upon the Confederates. While the Union guns swept the gulch with grape and canister, they charged upon the battery, almost to the muzzles of the pieces—daring three times repeated.

THE EXPLOITS OF BRIGADIER GERARD

By A. CONAN DOYLE

[Copyright, 1895, by Bacheller, Johnson and Bacheller.]

CHAPTER I.

I believe that the last story that I told you, my friends, was about how I received at the bidding of the emperor the cross for valor which I had, if I may be allowed to say so, so long deserved. Here upon the lapel of my coat you may see the ribbon, but the medal itself I keep in a leathern pouch at home, and I never venture to take it out unless one of the modern peace generals, or some foreigner of distinction who finds himself in our little town, takes advantage of the opportunity to pay his respects to the well-known Brigadier Gerard. Then I place it upon my breast, and I give my mustache the old Marengo twist which brings a gray point into either eye. Yet with it all I fear that neither they, nor you, either, my friends, will ever realize the man that I was. You know me only as a civilian—with an air and a manner it is true—but still merely as a civilian. Had you seen me as I stood in the doorway of the inn at Alamo on the first day of July in the year 1810 you would then have known what the hussar may attain to.

For a month I had lingered in that accursed village, and all on account of a lance thrust in my ankle which made it impossible for me to put my foot to the ground. There were three of us at first—old Bouvet, of the hussars; Jacques Regnier, of the cuirassiers, and a funny little voltigeur captain whose name I forget—but they all got well and hurried on to the front, while I sat gnawing my fingers and tearing my hair, and even, as I must confess, weeping from time to time as I thought of my hussars and the deplorable condition in which they must find themselves when deprived of their colonel. I was not a brigadier yet, you understand, although I already carried myself like one. But I was the youngest colonel in the whole service, and my regiment was wife and children to me. It went to my heart that they should be bereaved. It is true that Villaret, the senior major, was an excellent soldier, but still even among the best there are degrees of merit.

Ah, that happy July day of which I speak when first I limped to the door and stood in the golden Spanish sunshine! It was but the evening before that I had heard from the regiment. They were at Pastores on the other side of the mountains face to face with the English—not forty miles from me by road. But how was I to get to them? The same thrust which had pierced my ankle had slain my charger. I took advice from Gomez, the landlord, and from an old priest who had slept that night in the inn, but neither of them could do more than assure me that there was not so much as a colt left upon the whole country side. The landlord would not hear of my crossing the mountains without an escort, for he assured me that El Cuchillo, the Spanish guerrilla chief, was out that way with his band, and that it meant a death by torture to fall into his hands.

"IT IS I WHO CAN HELP YOU."

The old priest observed, however, that he did not think a French hussar would be deterred by that, and if I had had any doubts they would of course have been decided by his remark.

But a horse! How was I to get one? I was standing in the doorway plotting and planning when I heard the clink of shoes, and, looking up I saw a great bearded man with a blue cloak frogged across in military fashion coming towards me. He was riding a big black horse with one white stocking on his near foreleg.

"Hullo, comrade!" said I, as he came up to me.

"Hullo!" said he.

"I am Col. Gerard, of the hussars," said I. "I have lain here wounded for a month and I am now ready to rejoin my regiment at Pastores."

"I am M. Vidal, of the commissariat," he answered, "and I am myself upon my way to Pastores. I should be glad to have your company, colonel, for I hear that the mountains are far from safe."

"Alas!" said I, "I have no horse. But if you will sell me yours I will promise that an escort of hussars shall be sent back for you."

He would not hear of it, and it was in vain that the landlord told him dreadful stories of the doings of El Cuchillo, and that I pointed out the duty which he owed the army and to the country. He would not even argue but called loudly for a cup of wine. I craftily asked him to dismount and to drink with me, but he must have seen something in my face, for he shook his head, and then as I approached him with some thought of seizing him by the leg he jerked his heels into his horse's flanks and was off in a cloud of dust.

My faith, it was enough to make a man mad to see this fellow riding away so gayly to join his beef barrels and his brandy casks, and then to think of my five hundred beautiful hussars without their leader. I was gazing after him with bitter thoughts in my mind when who should touch me on the elbow but the little priest whom I have mentioned.

"It is I who can help you," said he. "I am myself traveling south."

I put my arms about him and as my ankle gave way at the same moment we nearly rolled upon the ground together.

"Get me to Pastores," I cried, "and you shall have a rosary of golden beads." I had taken one from the convent of Spiritu Sancto. It shows how necessary it is to take what you can when you are upon a campaign, and how the most unlikely things may become useful.

"I will take you," said he, in very excellent French, "not because I hope for any reward, but because it is my way always to do what I can to serve my countryman, and that is why I am so beloved wherever I go." With that he led me down to the village to an old cowhouse in which we found a tumble-down sort of diligence such as they used to run early in this century between some of our more remote villages. There were three old mules, too, none of which were strong enough to carry a man, but together they might draw the coach. The sight of their gaunt ribs and spavined legs gave me more delight than the whole two hundred and twenty hunters of the emperor which I have seen in their stalls at Fontainebleau. In ten minutes the owner was harnessing them into the coach, with no very good will, however, for he was in mortal dread of this terrible Cuchillo. It was only by promising him riches in this world, while the priest threatened him with damnation in the next, that we at last got him safely upon the box with the reins between his fingers. Then he was in such a hurry to get off out of fear lest we should find ourselves in the dark in the passes, that he hardly gave me time to renew my vows to the innkeeper's daughter. I cannot at this moment recall her name, but we wept together as we parted, and I can remember that she was a very beautiful woman. You will understand, my friends, that when a man like me, who has fought the men and kissed the women in fourteen separate kingdoms, gives a word of praise to the one or the other it has a little meaning of its own.

The little priest had seemed a trifle grave when we kissed good-bye, but he soon proved himself the best of companions in the diligence. All the way he amused me with tales of his little parish up in the mountains and I in my turn told him stories about the camp, but my faith I had to pick my steps, for when I said a word too much he would fidget in his seat and his face would show the pain that I had given him. And of course it is not the act of a gentleman to talk in anything but a proper manner to a religious man, though with all the care in the world one's words may get out of hand sometimes. He had come from the north of Spain, as he told me, and was going to see his mother in a village of Estremadura, and as he spoke about her little peasant home, and her joy in seeing him, it brought my mother so vividly to my thoughts that the tears started to my eyes. In his simplicity he showed me the little gifts which he was taking to her, and so kindly was his manner that I could readily believe him when he said that he was loved wherever he went. He examined my own uniform with as much curiosity as a child, admiring the plume of my busby and passing his fingers through the sable with which my dolman was trimmed. He drew my sword too, and then when I told him how many men I had cut down with it, and set my fingers on the notch made by the shoulder bone of the Russian emperor's aide-de-camp, he shuddered and placed the weapon under the leathern cushion, declaring that it made him sick to look at it.

Well, we had been rolling and creaking on our way whilst this talk had been going forward, and as we reached the base of the mountains we could hear the rumbling of cannon far away upon the right. This came from Messena who was, as I knew, besieging Cindad Rodrigo. There was nothing I should have wished better than to have gone straight to him, for he was the best Jew that I have heard of since Joshua's time, and if you are in sight of his beaky nose and bold, black eyes you are not likely to miss much of what is going on. Still a siege is always a poor sort of a pick-and-shovel business, and there were better prospects with my hussars in front of the English. Every mile that passed my heart grew lighter and lighter until I found myself shouting and singing like a young ensign fresh from Saint Cyr, just to think of seeing all my fine horses and my gallant fellows once more.

As we penetrated the mountains the road grew rougher and the pass more savage. At first we met a few muleteers, but now the whole country seemed deserted, which is not to be wondered at when you think that the French, the English and the guerrillas had each in turn had command over it. So bleak and wild was it, one great brown wrinkled cliff succeeding another, and the pass growing narrower and narrower, that I ceased to look out, but sat in silence thinking of this and that, of women whom I had loved and of horses which I had handled. I was suddenly brought back from my dreams, however, by observing the difficulties of my companion, who was trying with a sort of bradawl which he had drawn out to bore a hole through the leathern strap which held up his water flask. As he worked with twitching fingers the strap escaped his grasp and the wooden bottle fell at my feet. I stooped to pick it up, and as I did so the priest silently leaped upon my shoulders and drove his bradawl into my eye.

My friends, I am, as you know, a man steeled to face every danger. When one has served from the siege of Genoa to that last fatal day of Waterloo, and has had the special medal, which I keep at home in a leathern pouch, one can afford to confess when one is frightened. It may console some of you when your own nerves play you tricks to remember that you have heard even me, Brigadier Gerard, say that I have been scared. And besides my terror at this horrible attack, and the maddening pain of my wound, there was a sudden feeling of loathing such as you might feel were some filthy tarantula to strike its fangs into you. I clutched the creature in both hands and hurling him onto the floor of the coach I stamped on him with my heavy boots. He had drawn a pistol from the front of his soutane, but I kicked it out of his hand, and again I fell with my knees on his chest. Then for the first time he screamed horribly, while I, half blinded, felt about for the sword which he had so cunningly concealed. My hand had just lighted upon it, and I was dashing the blood from my face to see where he lay that I might transfix him, when the whole coach turned over upon its side, and my weapon was jerked out of my grasp by the shock. Before I could recover myself the door was burst open and I was dragged by the heels on to the road

CHAPTER II.

But even as I was torn out onto the flint stones and realized that thirty ruffians were standing around me, I was filled with joy, for my pelisse had been pulled over my head in the struggle and was covering one of my eyes, and it was with my wounded eye that I was seeing this band of brigands. You see for yourself by this pucker and scar how the thin blade passed between socket and ball, but it was only at that moment when I was dragged from the coach that I understood that my sight was not gone forever. The creature's intention, doubtless, was to drive it through my brain and, indeed, he loosened some portion of the inner bone of my head, so that I afterwards had more trouble from that wound than from any one of the seventeen which I have received.

They dragged me out, these sons of dogs, with curses and execrations, beating me with their fists and kicking me as I lay upon the ground. I had frequently observed that the mountaineers wore cloth swathed round their feet, but never did I imagine that I should have so much cause to be thankful for it. Presently, seeing the blood upon my head, and that I lay quiet, they thought that I was unconscious, whereas I was storing every ugly face among them in my memory, so that I might see them all safely hanged if ever my chance came around. Brawny rascals they were, with yellow handkerchiefs round their heads, and great red sashes stuffed with weapons. They had rolled two great rocks across the path, where it took a short turn, and it was these which had torn off one of the wheels of the coach and upset us. As to the reptile who had acted the priest so cleverly and had told me so much of his parish and his mother, he, of course, had known where the ambuscade was laid, and had attempted to put me beyond all resistance at the moment when we reached it.

I cannot tell you how frantic their rage was when they drew him out of the coach and saw the state to which I had reduced him. If he had not got all his deserts he had at least something as a souvenir of his meeting with Etienne Gerard, for his legs dangled aimlessly about, and though the upper part of his body was convulsed with rage and pain he sat straight down upon his feet when they tried to set him upright. But all the time his two little black eyes, which had seemed so kindly and so innocent in the coach, were glaring at me like a wounded cat, and he spat and spat and spat in my direction. My faith, when the wretches jerked me onto my feet again, and when I was dragged off up one of the mountain paths, I understood that a time was coming when I was to need all my courage and resource. My enemy was carried upon the shoulders of the men behind me, and I could hear his hissing and reviling first in one ear and then in the other as I was hurried up the winding track.

I suppose that it must have been an hour that we ascended, and what with my wounded ankle and the pain from my eye, and the fear lest this wound should have spoiled my good looks, I have made no journey to which I look back with less pleasure. I have never been a good climber at any time, but it is astonishing what you can do, even with a stiff ankle, when you have a copper-colored brigand at each elbow and a nine-inch blade within touch of your whiskers. We came at last to a place where the path wound over a ridge and descended upon the other side through thick pine trees into a valley which opened to the south. In time of peace I have little doubt that the villains were all smugglers and that these were the secret paths by which they crossed the Portuguese frontier. There were many mule tracks, and once I was surprised to see the marks of a large horse where a stream had softened the track. These were explained upon reaching a place where there was a clearing in the firwood. I saw the animal itself haltered to a fallen tree. My eyes hardly rested upon it when I recognized the great black limbs and the white near the foreleg. It was the very horse which I had begged for in the morning.

What then had become of Commissariat Vidal? Was it possible that there was another Frenchman in as perilous a plight as myself! The thought had hardly entered my head when our party stopped and one of them uttered a peculiar cry. It was answered from among the brambles which lined the base of a cliff at one side of the clearing, and an instant later ten or a dozen more brigands came out from amongst them and the two parties greeted each other. The newcomers surrendered my friend of the bradawl with cries of grief and sympathy, and then turning upon me they brandished their knives and howled at me like the gang of assassins that they were. So frantic were their gestures that I was convinced that my end had come, and was just bracing myself to meet it in a manner which should be worthy of my past reputation when one of them gave an order, and I was dragged roughly across the little glade to the brambles from which this new band had emerged.

A narrow pathway led through them to a deep grotto in the side of the cliff. The sun was already setting outside and in the cave itself it would have been quite dark but for a pair of torches which blazed from a socket on either side. Between them there was sitting at a rude table a very singular-looking person, whom I saw instantly, from the respect with which the others addressed him, could be none other than the brigand chief who had received, on account of his dreadful character, the sinister name of El Cuchillo. The man whom I had injured had been carried in and placed upon the top of a barrel, his helpless legs dangling about in front of him and his cat's eyes still darting glances of hatred at me. I understood from the snatches of talk which I could follow between the chief and him that he was the lieutenant of the band, and that part of his duties was to lie in wait, with his smooth tongue and his peaceful garb, for travelers like myself. When I thought of how many gallant officers may have been lured to their death by this monster of hypocrisy it gave me a glow of pleasure to think that I had brought his villainies to an end—though I feared it would be at the cost of a life which neither the emperor nor the army could well spare.

As the injured man, still supported on the barrel by two comrades, was explaining in Spanish all that had befallen him, I was held by several of the villains in front of the table at which the chief was seated, and had an excellent opportunity of observing him. I have seldom seen any man who was less like my idea of a brigand, and especially of a brigand with such a reputation that in a land of cruelty he had earned so dark a nickname. His face was bluff, and broad and bland, with ruddy cheeks and comfortable little tufts of side whiskers, which gave him the appearance of a well-to-do grocer of the Rue St. Antoine. He had not any of those flaring sashes or gleaming weapons which distinguished his followers, but on the contrary he wore a good broadcloth coat like a respectable father of a family, and save his brown leggings there was nothing to indicate a life among the mountains. His surroundings, too, corresponded with himself, and beside his snuff box upon the table there stood a great brown book, which looked like a commercial ledger, Many other books were ranged along a plank between two powder casks, and there was a great litter of papers, some of which had verses scribbled upon them. All this I took in while he, leaning indolently back in his chair, was listening to the report of his lieutenant. Having heard everything he ordered the cripple to be carried out again, and I was left with only three guards waiting to hear my fate. He took up his pen and, tapping his forehead with the handle of it, he pursed up his lips and looked out of the corner of his eyes at the roof of the grotto.

"I suppose," said he at last, speaking very excellent French, "that you are not able to suggest a rhyme for the word Covilha."

I answered that my acquaintance with the Spanish language was so limited that I was unable to oblige him.

"It is a very rich language," said he, "but less prolific in rhymes than either the German or the English. That is why our best work has been done in blank verse, a form of literature which, as I need not remind a Frenchman, is capable of reaching great heights. But I fear that such subjects are somewhat outside the range of a hussar."

"HE WAS NOT DEAD WHEN WE BURIED HIM."

I was about to answer that if they were good enough for a guerrilla they could not be too much for the light cavalry, but he was already stooping over his half-finished verse. Presently he threw down the pen with an exclamation of satisfaction and declaimed a few lines which drew a cry of approval from the three ruffians who held me. His broad face blushed like a young girl who receives her first compliment.

"The critics are in my favor, it appears," said he. "We amuse ourselves in our long evenings by singing our own ballads, you understand. I have some little facility in that direction and I do not at all despair of seeing some of my poor efforts in print before long, and with 'Madrid' upon the title page, too. But we must get back to business. May I ask what your name is?"

"Etienne Gerard."

"Rank?"

"Colonel."

"Corps?"

"The Third hussars."

"You are young for a colonel."

"My career has been an eventful one."

"Tut, that makes it the sadder," said he, with his bland smile.

I made no answer to that, but I tried to show him by my bearing that I was ready for the very worst which could befall me.

"By the way, I rather fancy that we have had some of your corps here," said he, turning over the pages of his big, brown register. "We endeavor to keep a record of our operations. Here is a heading under June 24. Have you not a young officer named Soubiron, a tall, slight youth with light hair?"

"Certainly."

"I see that we buried him upon that date."

"Poor lad!" I cried. "And how did he die?"

"We buried him."

"But before you buried him?"

"You misunderstand, colonel, he was not dead before we buried him."

MONEY LOANED.

Local Representatives Wanted.

Our system affords an opportunity to borrow on either personal or real estate security. The plan is superior to building and loan associations. The amount borrowed may be returned in monthly payments without bonus, with interest at 5 per cent. per annum. It affords absolute security to investors, with a reasonable guarantee of an annual dividend of from 8 to 10 per cent. We desire to secure the services of energetic, representative men in every community to act as local secretaries. The position will be sufficiently remunerative to amply compensate for services. THE EXPLOITS OF BRIGADIER GERARD

BY A. CONAN DOYLE

[Copyright, 1895, by Bacheller, Johnson & Bacheller]

CHAPTER III.

"You buried him alive?" For a moment I was too stunned to act. Then I hurled myself upon the man, as he sat, with that placid smile of his upon his lips, and I would have torn his throat out had the three wretches not dragged me away from him. Again and again I made for him, panting and cursing, shaking off this man and that, straining and wrenching, but never quite free. At last, with my jacket nearly torn off my back and the blood dripping from my wrists, I was hauled backwards in the bight of a rope and cords passed around my ankles and my arms.

"You sleek hound," I cried. "If ever I have you at my swordspoint I will teach you to maltreat one of my lads. You will find, you bloodthirsty beast, that my emperor has long arms, and, though you lie here like a rat in its hole, the time will come when he will tear you out of it, and you and your vermin will perish together." My faith, I have a rough side to my tongue, and there was not a hard word that I had learned in fourteen campaigns which I did not let fly at him, but he sat with the handle of his pen tapping against his forehead and his eyes squinting up at the roof as if he had conceived the idea of some new stanza. It was this occupation of his which showed me how I might get my point into him. "You spawn," said I, "you think that you are safe here, but your life may be as short as that of your absurd verses, and God knows it could not be shorter than that."

Oh, you should have seen him bound from his chair when I had said the words. This vile monster, who dispensed death and torture as a grocer serves out figs, had one raw nerve which I could prod at pleasure. His face now grew livid and those little bourgeois side whiskers quivered and thrilled with his passion.

"Very good, colonel. You have said enough," he cried, in a choking voice. "You say that you have had a very distinguished career; I promise you also a very distinguished ending. Col. Etienne Gerard, of the Third hussars, shall have a death of his own."

"And I only beg," said I, "that you do not commemorate it in verse." I had one or two other little ironies to utter, but he cut me short with a furious gesture which caused my three guards to drag me from the cave.

Our interview, which I have told you as nearly as I can remember it, must have lasted some time, for it was quite dark when we came out, and the moon was shining very clearly in the heavens. The brigands had lighted a great fire of the dried branches of the fir trees; not of course for warmth, since the night was already very sultry, but to cook their evening meal. A huge copper pot hung over the blaze, and the rascals were lying all around in the yellow glare, so that the scene looked like one of those pictures which Junot stole out of Madrid. There are some soldiers who profess to care nothing for art and the like, but I have always been drawn toward it myself, in which respect I show my good taste and my breeding. I remember, for example, that when they were selling the plunder after the fall of Danzig, I bought a very fine picture called "Nymphs Surprised in a Wood," and I carried it with me through two campaigns until my charger had the misfortune to put his hoof through it.

I only tell you this, however, to show you that I was never a mere rough soldier like Rapp or Lefebvre. As I lay in that brigands' camp I had little time or inclination to think about such matters. They had thrown me down under a tree, the three villains squatting round and smoking their cigarettes within hand's touch of me. What to do I could not imagine. In my whole career I do not suppose that I have ten times been in as hopeless a situation. "But courage," thought I, "courage, my brave boy, you were not made a colonel of hussars at twenty-eight because you could dance a cotillon. You are a picked man, Etienne, a man who has come through more than two hundred affairs and this little one is surely not going to be the last." I began eagerly to glance about for some chance of escape, and as I did so I saw something which filled me with great astonishment.

I have already told you that a large fire was burning in the center of the glade. What with its glare and what with its moonlight everything was as clear as possible. On the other side of the glade there was a single tall fir tree which attracted my attention because its trunk and lower branches were discolored, as if a large fire had recently been lit underneath it. A clump of bushes grew in front of it which concealed the base. Well, as I looked towards it I was surprised to see projecting above the bush, and fastened apparently to the tree, a pair of fine riding boots with the toes upwards. At first I thought that they were tied there, but as I looked harder I saw that they were secured by a great nail which was hammered through the foot of each. And then suddenly, with a thrill of horror, I understood that they were not empty boots, and, moving my head a little to the right, I was able to see who it was that had been fastened there and why a fire had been lit beneath the tree. It is not pleasant to speak or think of horrors, my friends, and I do not wish to give any of you bad dreams to-night, but I cannot take you among the Spanish guerrillas without showing you what kind of men they were and the sort of warfare that they waged. I will only say that I understood why Monsieur Vidal's horse was waiting masterless in the grove, and that I hoped that he had met this terrible fate with sprightliness and courage, as a good Frenchman ought.

It was not a very cheering sight for me, as you can imagine. When I had been with their chief in the grotto I had been so carried away by my rage at the cruel death of young Soubiron, who was one of the brightest lads who ever threw his thigh over a charger, that I had never given a thought to my own position. Perhaps it would have been more politic had I spoken the ruffian fair, but it was too late now. The cork was drawn and I must drain the wine. Besides, if the harmless commissariat man was put to such a death, what hope was there for me, who had snapped the spine of their lieutenant? No, I was doomed in any case, so it was as well, perhaps, that I should have put the best face on the matter. This beast could bear witness that Etienne Gerard had died as he had lived, and that one prisoner at least had not quailed before him. I lay there thinking of the various girls who would mourn for me, and of my dear old mother, and of the deplorable loss that I should be both to my regiment and to the emperor, and I am not ashamed to confess to you that I shed tears as I thought of the general consternation which my premature end would give rise to.

But all the time I was taking the very keenest notice of everything which might possibly help me. I am not a man who would lie like a sick horse waiting for the farriar sergeant and the pole ax. First I would give a little tug at my ankle cords, and then another at those that were around my wrists, and all the time I was trying to loosen them I was peering round to see if I could find something which was in my favor. There was one thing which was very evident. A hussar is but half formed without a horse, and there was my other half quietly grazing within thirty yards of me. Then I observed yet another thing. The path by which we had come over the mountains was so steep that a horse could only be led across it slowly and with difficulty, but in the other direction the ground appeared to be more open, and to lead straight down into a gently sloping valley. Had I but my feet in yonder stirrups and my saber in my hand, a single bold dash might take me out of the power of these vermin of the rocks.

I was still thinking it over and straining with my wrists and my ankles when their chief came out from his grotto and after some talk with his lieutenant, who lay groaning near the fire, they both nodded their heads and looked across at me. He then said some few words to the band, who clapped their hands and laughed uproariously. Things looked ominous, and I was delighted to feel that my hands were so far free that I could easily slip them through the cords if I wished. But with my ankles I feared that I could do nothing, for when I strained it brought such pain into my knee wound that I had to gnaw my mustache to keep from crying out. I could only lie still, half free and half bound, and see what turn things were likely to take.

For a little I could not see what they were after. One of the rascals climbed up to the top of a well-grown fir tree up on one side of the glade, and tied a rope around the top of the trunk. He then fastened another rope in the same fashion to a similar tree on the other side. The two loose ends were now dangling down, and I waited with some curiosity and just a little trepidation to see what they would do next. The whole band pulled upon one of the ropes until they had bent the strong young tree down into a semi-circle, and they then fastened it to a stump, so as to hold it so. When they had bent the other tree down in a similar fashion, the two summits were within a few feet of each other, though, as you understand, they would each spring back to their original position the instant that they were released. I already saw the diabolical plan which those miscreants had formed.

"I presume that you are a strong man, colonel," said the chief, coming toward me with his hateful smile.

"If you will have the kindness to loosen these cords," I answered, "I will show you how strong I am."

"We were all interested to see whether you were as strong as these two young saplings," said he. "It is our intention, you see, to tie one end of each rope round your ankles and then to let the trees go. If you are stronger than the trees, then, of course, no harm would be done. If on the other hand the trees are stronger than you—why, in that case, colonel, we may have a souvenir of you upon each side of our little glade." He laughed as he spoke, and at the sight of it the whole forty of them laughed also. Even now if I am in my darker humor, or if I have a touch of my old Lithuanian ague, I see in my sleep that ring of dark savage faces with their cruel eyes and the firelight flashing upon their strong white teeth.

CLEVER PERFORMERS.

Expert Artists Entertain a Monroe Avenue Audience.

Ventriloquism and shadow-graphy formed the principal part of the entertainment in the Monroe Avenue Chapel last evening. The room was comfortably filled with an appreciative audience. The programme commenced with a piano solo, artistically rendered by Mr. Jenke, which was heartily encored.

Howard S Starrett was then introduced, and drew several crayon sketches, one of which, the Brooklyn bridge by moonlight, was very effective. The next number on the programme was a whistling solo by Mr. Evans. In response to the vigorous applause, Mr. Evans gave another selection.

Mr. Starrett now appeared with his dolls, "Tommy", "Joe", "Miss Jones" and Mr. Smith", with which he gave a very entertaining exhibition of ventriloquism. Mr. Starrett is certainly very proficient at that art, giving not the slightest sign when he spoke. "Mr. Smith" recited, "Miss Jones" sang, and "Tommy" kept up a running comment on everybody and everything. "Tommy" and "Joe" were at last returned to the box, where his repeated "Get over on your own side" kept the audience in roars of laughter.

Another piano solo by Mr. Jenke followed, and then Mr. Starrett gave a number of accurate representations. Mr. Evans gave another whistling solo, after which Mr. Starrett concluded the evening's entertainment with a very amusing exhibition of shadow graphy. The quickness of his fingers was marvelous, and rabbits, butterflies, and dogs, appeared in rapid succession. Then the figures became more complex, and men appeared. A love scene followed, in which the girl, the lover, and, of course, the enraged parent, all came on the scene. The man out rowing brought down the house, especially when he raised a bottle to his lips and began to drink. After a number of other equally amusing representations, the entertainment came to an end, and the audience dispersed.

Will Meet the Crack Shots.

Neaf Apgar went to Paterson today to participate in the great American handicap shooting match, in which 57 of the best amateur and wing shots of the country have paid an entrance fee of $25 to contest for the valuable prizes to be given to the winners. The conditions of the shoot are 25 live birds, with handicaps ranging from 25 to 33 yards, 50 yards boundary and a 33-yard dead line. Mr. Apgar's shooting number is 34, handicapped at 30 yards. The New York Sun speaks of Mr. Apgar as one of the best amateur shots in the contest.

Two Wagons Collide.

While endeavoring to turn around in the roadway on Park avenue near Justice Nash's office this morning the buggy of Joseph W. Sandford of West Seventh street was struck broadside by the pole of the Metuchen stage and completely turned over on the side. The coachman was thrown out, but not injured. With the aid of Chief Grant and several bystanders the carriage was righted up and the driver proceeded home with nothing more serious than a mud-bespattered wagon.

A Beneficial Talk.

The meeting of the Christian Alliance at 317 East Front street last night, addressed by Miss Louise Sheppard of New York, was attended by about 125 persons. Miss Sheppard wrought great interest among her hearers with the logical and beneficial discussion which she developed from the subject of "Have you received the Holy Ghost since ye believed?" Her singing of the "Holy Guest", and "Days of Heaven", with a beautifully-trained soprano voice, also charmed those in attendance.

Death of Mrs. Cadmus.

The death occurred last evening of Mrs. C. W. Cadmus, widow of the late Jasper Cadmus, in her 84th year, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. A. R. Vail, Duer street. Her son, Clark Cadmus, was taken ill while on a visit here, and died only recently. Mrs. Cadmus was well known in Plainfield, having been a resident here for many years.

The funeral services will be held Friday afternoon at 2 from Grace P. E. Church.

This Car Holds Ten.

The new passenger elevator which is being placed in the Babcock Building by the Elektron Manufacturing Company of Springfield, Mass., will be of quartered oak, with combination gas and electric lights, capable of carrying 2,000 pounds or 10 people. The work of placing the elevator in position is under the supervision of F. A. Wallace, an expert in this line of work.

It will be an agreeable surprise to persons subject to attacks of bilious colic to learn that prompt relief may be had by taking Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. In many instances the attack may be prevented by taking this remedy as soon as the first symptoms of the disease appear. 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy, Park and North aves. T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

EUTERPES ARE AWAKE.

They Will Give Plainfield a Surprising Performance, With Many Novelties.

The Country Club Casino, judging from present indications, will hold as brilliant an audience, on the occasion of the first public musical entertainment of the Euterpe Society, April 25, as it has ever held.

The overture will be performed by three members of the society on one piano. Miss F. May Grant of the First Baptist Church will render an aria from Gounod's "Romeo and Juliet", accompanied by Miss Lillian A. Force. The genial and refined artist Hugh J. Emmett will appear in three numbers on the programme, giving his famous violin solos, imitations of various animals, and playing in every conceivable position and under many difficulties. The Musical Russells have added a number of new and novel instruments to their equipment since they last appeared in Plainfield, and are a host in themselves. The clever Martyne, from Keith's Theatre, Chicago, will stimulate his popular "sixty laughs in sixty minutes". He does it well, too, and is the only man who can laugh and cry at the same time, while delineating fifteen different people.

The Euterpe itself, although organized only a short time, has enjoyed a prosperous growth. It is composed of musical and literary people of this city, and friends who have a liking for the muses. Every two weeks meetings will be held, and selections rendered by those members present, who are always expected, when they attend, to assist with some entertainment in their particular line.

The organizers are M. A. Korff, Murray Burtis, E. A. Lowe, J. de J. Costales, A. Costales, T. H. Cuming, Chas. Smink and L. Spangenberg, who is president.

Dreier-Krone.

The imposing and pretty service of the Jewish Church made the wedding of Garrett Dreier of this city to Sarah Krone of Brooklyn, in Bouch's gallery, Brooklyn, yesterday afternoon at 5, a brilliant affair. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Dr. Keisenhein of the Brooklyn Temple, assisted by Rev. Mr. Goodstein. Miss Bertha Dreier, sister of the groom, was maid of honor, and Peter Krone, brother of the bride, the best man. There were also four bridemaids and four groomsmen. The bride was gowned in white satin. After the ceremony, an elaborate supper was served, during which Revs. Geisenhein and Goodstein and William Newcorn, of this city, made brief remarks. A dance followed the supper, at the conclusion of which the bridal couple left for a tour through the South.

Those present from Plainfield were Samuel Dreier and family, William Newcorn and wife and Henry Piker. The couple will reside in Brooklyn.

Midsummer-Night's Dream.

A rare intellectual treat is offered the Plainfield public in the series of entertainments to be given by Charles F. Underhill in the Casino, under the auspices of the Young Daughters of the King, Washington Park, North Plainfield.

Midsummer-Night's Dream, to be given tomorrow evening, April 4, is an entertainment that has won golden opinions for Mr. Underhill in many cities, where his skilful impersonations have delighted large audiences. The accompaniment of Mendelssohn music adds greatly to the artistic effect produced by Mr. Underhill's rendering of the great Shakespearean drama.

The Whist Championship.

The Albany Whist Club will contest the Park Club whist four for the American championship trophy the latter part of this week, under the same conditions that the Philadelphia Club was defeated last Saturday, except that the first half of the game will in all probability be played Friday night and the last half Saturday night, so as not to interfere with the business duties of the players.

Camera Entertainments.

At the meeting of the Camera Club last evening it was decided to give bi-monthly entertainments. J. Hervey Doane was chosen to take charge of the matter, and he will appoint a committee to work with him. Messrs. Saugstad and Audsley were elected members of the club.

Marvelous Results.

From a letter written by Rev. J. Gunderman, of Diamondale, Mich., we are permitted to make this extract: "I have no hesitation in recommending Dr. King's New Discovery, as the results were almost marvelous in the case of my wife. While I was pastor of the Baptist Church at Rives Junction she was brought down by pneumonia succeeding la grippe. Terrible paroxysms of coughing would last hours with little interruption and it seemed as if she could not survive them. A friend recommended Dr. King's New Discovery. It was quick in its work and highly satisfactory in results. Sold by L. W. Randolph, druggist. Regular size, 50c and $1; our price 45c and 90c

SUDDEN DEATH.

Mrs. Elizabeth VanZandt Dies While Talking to Her Daughter.

Mrs. Elizabeth VanZandt, widow of the late John VanZandt, who has been a resident of Plainfield the past twelve years, died very suddenly yesterday while sitting in a chair talking with her daughter, Mrs. M. M. Dunham, at her home on Arlington avenue.

There was a sudden break in her talk, and Mrs. Dunham noticed that her head inclined slightly forward, and on a second look discovered that life had left the body. Death was caused by neuralgia of the heart.

Mrs. VanZandt was apparently in her usual good health, and the announcement of her death was a great shock to all.

Mrs. VanZandt was born near South Branch seventy-eight years ago, and later moved near Somerville, where she lived forty years. Her husband died fifteen years ago, leaving the widow and three daughters, Mrs. G. Q. Dolliver, Mrs. M. M. Dunham, and Miss VanZandt. Mrs. VanZandt lived among her daughters.

Decedent was a member of Trinity Reformed Church, and was an excellent Christian woman, beloved for her many amiable qualities.

The funeral services will be held Friday morning at 11:30 from the residence of her daughter, Mrs. M. M. Dunham. Interment will be in Somerville.

The death of Mrs. VanZandt was a fulfilment of a wish which she had expressed while waiting on the Dunhams. Mr. and Mrs. Dunham were ill, and she said "I hope I shan't have to linger and suffer like them. When I die, I want to go like a flash."

NEW OFFICERS INTRODUCED.

Young Ladies Mission Band Entertains at Home and Educates Abroad.

The Young Ladies Mission Band, which is composed of members from the First Presbyterian and Crescent Avenue churches, held their regular April meeting in the parlors of the First Presbyterian Church yesterday afternoon. The newly-elected officers were introduced informally to the members. They are: President, Miss Emily Tracy; Vice-president, Miss Harriet Halloway; Secretary, Miss Kathrene Thorn; Treasurer, Miss Josephine Petrie; Board of Managers, Miss Marguerite Yerkes, Miss Bessie Hull, Miss Mary Bronson, Miss Louise Patten, Miss Etta Bilech.

Business of a routine nature was transacted. The reports showed that the Band was in a flourishing condition. One hundred dollars was reported in the treasury, besides a contingency fund.

The Band contributes regularly to a school in Brazil, a teacher in India, and the Foreign Mission Board.

Rev. Dr. W. R. Richards was present at the meeting, and after the business was concluded he gave a most excellent and helpful talk on "Systematic Giving".

The membership of the Band is sixty active and six associate.

At the close of the meeting, chocolate and wafers were served, and a short time was spent socially.

FOR A CAMPFIRE.

Sons of Veterans Arranging Fraternal Festivities.

The meeting of John Hand Camp, No. 28, Sons of Veterans, held last evening, was largely attended, and a considerable amount of business was transacted. One recruit received the Degree of Loyalty.

The committee appointed to arrange with the Somerville and Flemington Camps for a campfire reported that Flemington had dropped out on account of the distance from either Somerville or Plainfield, and that the arrangements would be made with the latter Camp. It was decided that a delegation attend the next meeting of the Somerville Camp, Monday evening, April 15.

The committee to secure a stand of colors for the camp reported progress. It is the intention to have them by Decoration Day.

The matter of guns and equipments was brought up, and it was stated that the necessary steps had been taken to secure the same.

Until further notice Friday evening of each week was set as drill night. Martin's Armory will be used for this purpose.

The question of the Camp joining the Funeral Benefit Association of the order was discussed, and was finally laid on the table till the next meeting. The programme for Decoration Day was talked about, and the committee appointed to confer with the joint detail from the G. A. R. Posts and Woman's Relief Corps stated what was done at the last meeting.

An invitation was extended the Camp to attend a reception Thursday evening, April 11, in the W. C. T. U. rooms, and was accepted.

—"Ole's Luck" in Music Hall tomorrow night.

—The E. A. C's won both bowling games last night.

A Musical Veteran.

Marshal Pangborn took care of a colored veteran last night named Charles Carter, a member of the 26th U.S. Colored Troops, enlisted in Erie County, Pa. He was on his way to New York, and needed assistance. He had a violin made of a cigar box, and discoursed quaint music to the genial marshal, and along the streets today.

Those who never read the advertisements in their newspapers miss more than they presume. Jonathan Kenison, of Bolan, Worth Co., who had been troubled with rheumatism in his back, arms and shoulders, read an item in his paper about how a prominent German citizen of Fort Madison had been cured. He procured the same medicine, and to use his own words: "It cured me right up." He also says: A neighbor and his wife were both sick in bed with rheumatism. Their boy was over to my house and said they were so bad that he had to do the cooking. I told him of Chamberlain's Pain Balm and how it had cured me, he procured a bottle of it and it cured them up in a week. 50 cent bottles for sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy, Park and North aves. T. S. JUNIOR GYMNASTS.

After Entertaining Their Visitors with Evolutions, They Have a Tug of War.

The Junior department of the Y. M. C. A. gymnasium gave their first public exhibition in the building yesterday, under the direction of Physical Director MacPhie. The number of visitors was large, and all thoroughly enjoyed the exhibition, which was highly creditable in every respect.

The different branches of work were all executed with piano accompaniment, and graceful changes were made from one apparatus to another. The 70 boys in the class were divided into four sections, according to age and size.

The dumb-bell drill was a pleasant feature of the exhibition, and was well performed.

An exciting tug of war was held at the close, the boys being very evenly matched. The first pull was won by Captain Walter Long's team, the second by Captain Irving Clark's, and the final by Captain Long's. Loud applause greeted the victors when the war was ended.

The teams were as follows: Captain Long's—A Finch, G Charland, M Slater, John Hull, Stanley Peck, R T Phillips. Captain Irving Clark's—Fred Bonny, W A Townsend, Orville Waring, Aubrey Hull, Wilbur Opdyke, Donald McGee.

When two (2) or more frame houses are built continuous the dividing wall between each house is to be of brick not less than eight (8) inches thick above foundation wall to a point everywhere twelve (12) inches above roof.

This wall to be coped with stone or terra cotta. The ends of floor beams resting on such wall to be separated by at least four (4) inches of brickwork between in every case.

Every wooden or frame building, with a brick or other front within the fire limits, which may hereafter be damaged by fire, the elements or otherwise, to an amount not greater than one-half the total immediately previous value thereof, may be repaired or rebuilt pursuant to the provisions of this ordinance.

But, if such damage shall amount to more than one-half such value, then such building shall not be repaired or rebuilt, but shall be demolished.

Section 11. Should the decision of the Inspector or Appraiser as hereinafter prescribed permit of the repair or restoration of any building, every damaged wall or part thereof shall be repaired or restored to its full original strength, but only within the limits of its original height and other dimensions and uses.

Section 12. The previous value of such building and the proportion of such damage, the extent of re-use of any wall or walls or parts without repair, and the amount of repairs or restoration may be determined by the Inspector, subject to appeal as hereinafter provided.

Upon the written demand of the owner or owners of such premises, to be sent to the Mayor, he shall appoint one appraiser and one appraiser shall be selected by said owner or owners.

They shall at once examine the said premises, and if they agree their decision is to be stated separately in writing and sworn to, and shall be final and conclusive.

Said report is also to include a separate detailed statement in writing as to causes or probable causes of damage, and of the general or special conditions making favorable thereto in each case, and may also include the suggestions of the appraisers as to effective future remedy and prevention.

These reports are to be kept carefully filed by the Inspector in a special docket to be known as the Fire Inquest Docket.

Temporary stagings, platforms or floorings for seating or standing purposes may be constructed of wood, upon filing of plans and permit from Inspector.

All temporary structures of wood are to be demolished by owners upon the completion of purpose specified.

Fences of wood shall not be over ten (10) feet in total height.

Signs of wood shall not be erected over two (2) feet high on any building.

Piazzas or balconies of wood, not more than twelve (12) feet in width and to extend in height not more than three (3) feet above the second story floor beams, may be erected upon not more than two faces or sides of any detached dwelling house, occupied by not more than three (3) families.

One wooden bay or oriel window may be built of wood upon any face or front of any building, if but one (1) story in height and not more than one-third of the width of said face or front.

If but two stories in height and of said proportionate width, it may be constructed of wood, but shall be covered with metal, slate or tile.

If of any greater height or dimensions, or more than one is desired on any one side or face, it or they shall be wholly built of fireproof material.

Exterior privies, wood or coal houses not exceeding one hundred and fifty (150) square feet in superficial area and not over eight (8) feet in height, may be built upon permit from the Inspector, with roofs only, covered with metal, clay tile, or slate.

Section 14. Lumber or other combustible material shall not be piled at any lesser distance from the nearest division fence, or to adjacent building, than the height of such pile.

Storage up to fences of street lines will be allowed.

NEW BUILDINGS WITHIN THE FIRE LIMITS.

Section 15. The walls of all buildings other than frame buildings and constructions herein authorized, shall be constructed of stone, brick, iron or other hard incombustible material, and the several component parts of such buildings shall be as hereinafter provided.

Every brick, stone or iron building, hereafter erected within the city limits, shall also be constructed as required for buildings within the fire limits.

When the walls of a structure are twenty-five feet or more distant from every street line, then the average level of the grades at walls may be taken instead of curb.

If the wall is practically entirely carried on iron girders supported by masonry piers or iron columns, the measurements as to height, may be taken from the top of such girder, for such wall only.

The width of buildings for the purposes of this ordinance shall be construed by the direction in which the beams are placed, the length wise of the beams to mean the width wise of the building, and the bearing walls are those on which the beams are carried.

Section 16. All excavations shall be properly guarded and protected by the person or persons causing the excavation to be made, so as to prevent the same from becoming dangerous to life and limb; and shall be sheet piled where necessary, to prevent caving in of adjoining earth.

Whenever an excavation for building or other purposes shall be intended to be, or shall be, carried to a depth of more than ten (10) feet below the street curb, the person or persons causing such excavation to be made shall, at all times, from the beginning to the completion thereof, at his or their expense, preserve any adjoining or contiguous wall or walls from injury, and support the same by proper foundations, so that the said wall or walls shall be, and remain practically as safe as before such excavation was begun, whether the said adjoining or contiguous wall or walls are down more or less than ten feet below the street curb.

If such excavation shall not be intended to be, or shall not be, carried to a depth of more than ten (10) feet below the street curb, the owner or owners of such adjoining or contiguous wall or walls shall preserve the same from injury, and so support the same by proper foundations to full depth of such excavation that it or they shall be and remain practically as safe as before such excavation was begun, and for that purpose shall be permitted to enter upon the premises where such excavation is being made, when necessary, and shall complete the same within reasonable time.

If in either case entry at reasonable times is refused, the Inspector may determine such difference, or prescribe the best and most practicable way of making safe as herein required.

If an adjoining party wall is intended to be used by the person or persons causing the excavation to be made, and the use of such wall is approved by the Inspector, then the said person or persons causing the excavation to be made shall at his or their expense amply protect and secure such party wall by proper foundations as before described.

If the person or persons whose duty it shall be to preserve or protect any wall or walls from injury shall neglect or fail so to do, after having had twenty-four hours' notice from the Inspector, then the Inspector may enter upon the premises and make same secure and safe at the expense of the person or persons last herein referred to.

Section 17.—Except on rock bottom all foundations shall have footing courses, and all footing or base courses under foundation walls shall be laid not less than three (3) feet below the permanent surface of the ground, on a good solid bottom; and in case the nature of the earth and the character of the building shall require it, on a bottom of driven piles or laid timber, of proper kind and sufficient size and thickness, or such other approved foundation as the Inspector and the nature of the case may require, to keep and maintain the walls firm and secure.

All piers, columns or posts, resting on the earth, shall be set upon a solid bottom, in the same manner as required for the foundation walls.

Except in the case of adjacent excavations as hereinbefore provided, should any grade be lowered the foundational supports shall be also carried down to the depth above prescribed.

The footing or base course under all the foundation walls, and under all piers, columns or posts resting on the earth shall be of stone or concrete, and if under a foundation wall shall be at least six (6) inches wider than the bottom width of the wall; and if under piers, columns or posts, shall be at least six (6) inches wider on all sides than the outside bottom lines of said piers, columns or posts.

The thickness of all footing courses shall be not less than one-third their width, but no concrete footing course shall be less than six (6) inches thick.

All base stones shall be well bedded and laid crosswise, edge to edge.

Section 18. In buildings where the space under the sidewalk is utilized, a sufficient stone or brick wall shall be built to retain the roadway of the street, and the side, end or party walls of such building shall extend under the sidewalk, of sufficient thickness, to such walls.

The roofs of all vaults shall be of incombustible material.

Openings in the roofs of vaults for the admission of coal or light shall be covered with lights of glass in iron frames, or with iron covers having a rough surface, and rabbeted flush with the sidewalk; these lights shall not be more than four inches square.

When areas are covered, iron, iron and glass combined, stone or other incombustible materials shall be used, and sufficient strength in such covering shall be provided to insure safety to persons walking on the same and to carry the loads which may be placed thereon.

Open areas shall be properly protected with suitable railings.

Section 19. Foundation walls shall be construed to include all walls and piers below the curb level or tier of beams nearest to the curb level, intended to serve as supports for all superimposed weights.

All foundation walls shall be built of stone or brick.

If built of stone, they shall be at least eight (8) inches thicker than the wall resting upon it, to a depth of not more than ten (10) feet below curb.

If built of brick, they shall be at least four (4) inches thicker than the wall resting upon it, to a depth of not more than ten (10) feet below curb.

All stone walls shall have at least one header extending through the wall in every three (3) feet each way, of good flat stones.

All stone to be laid on its natural bed, to be built flush and true on both sides with struck joints, and all foundations below grade to be laid in good lime and cement mortar.

Section 20. When walls herein prescribed are of diminishing thickness upwards, the said decrease of thickness shall be construed to mean at the top line of tier of beams nearest to the height specified.

The ends of all wooden beams in all walls, especially in all party walls, are to be separated by at least four (4) inches of brick work.

And in eight (8) inch walls, to be strapped together on the tops of every fourth beam strongly spiked, for cross tie.

As many stories as desired may be placed within the given total heights.

If a greater height than seventy-five (75) feet is desired for the walls of any building, the entire building must be built of approved fire-proof construction.

If any tower or part of any building or structure is to be built of a greater height than seventy-five (75) feet above curb, it shall be built of fire-proof materials as approved by the Inspector.

OUTSIDE WALLS OF DWELLINGS.

When bearing walls are less than twenty-five (25) feet apart, or are intersected by cross walls, or strengthened by piers of sufficient size, the Inspector may permit the reduction of thickness of interior walls in just proportion to such added strength, except on walls less than forty (40) feet in height.

Where the clear span exceeds twenty-five (25) feet in any part of a building the walls supporting said span shall be four (4) inches more in thickness than is in this section specified, for every twelve and one-half (12½) feet or fraction thereof, that said span exceeds twenty-five (25) feet.

Where any bearing wall or part thereof shall in its horizontal section or plan be weakened by excess of flues or openings, or at any other point not herein provided for, the inspector shall require its amendment to a sufficient total bearing thickness.

Section 26. In all buildings over twenty-five (25) feet in width between walls there shall be partition walls of masonry, or girders supported on iron or wooden columns or piers of masonry, the said supporting walls or girders shall be spaced not more than twenty-five (25) feet apart on longitudinal centres, and the columns, girders or piers shall be of sufficient strength, spacing and size to bear safely the weight and any strain to be imposed upon them.

All party and interior walls over fifty (50) feet high, and not over sixty (60) feet in height, may be built twelve (12) and eight (8) inches respectively in thickness, but no such wall shall have a vertical portion eight (8) inches thick more than twenty-five (25) feet in height.

All party and interior walls over sixty (60) feet high, and not over seventy-five (75) feet in height, shall be not less than sixteen (16) inches in thickness to the height of fifteen (15) feet, and from thence upward twelve (12) and eight (8) inches respectively in thickness, but no such wall shall have a vertical portion eight (8) inches in thickness more than fifteen (15) feet in height.

Where the clear span exceeds twenty-five (25) feet in any part of a building the walls supporting said span shall be four (4) inches more in thickness than is in this section specified, for every twelve and one-half (12½) feet or fraction thereof, that said span exceeds twenty-five (25) feet.

Where any bearing wall or part thereof shall in its horizontal section or plan be weakened by excess of flues or openings, or at any other point not herein provided for, the inspector shall require its amendment to a sufficient total bearing thickness.

In all buildings of a public character, such as hotels, churches, theatres, restaurants, railroad depots, public halls and other buildings used or intended to be used fo purposes of public assembly, amusement or instruction the halls, doors, stairways, seats, passageways and aisles and all lighting and heating appliances and apapratus shall be arranged as the Inspetor of Buildings shall direct, to facilitate egress in case of fire or accident, and to afford the requisite and proper accommodation for the public protection in such cases.

CHICAGO REPUBLICAN

Swift Elected Mayor by a Large Majority.

The Entire Republican Ticket with the Exception of a Few Aldermen Victorious — St. Louis Also Captured by the Republicans and Only Two Offices Were Saved by the Democrats—Result of Elections at Other Places.

Chicago, April 3.—The entire republican ticket, with the exception of a few isolated aldermen, was elected here. George B. Swift's plurality for mayor approximates 45,000. Nine hundred and ten precincts returned Swift 139,211 votes; Wenter (dem.) 99,162 and Holmes (pop.) 9,676. The council will stand overwhelmingly republican. McKenna (dem.) was defeated by the republicans for alderman in the First ward, a democratic stronghold, by 400 votes.

Frank Lawler Elected Alderman.

In the Nineteenth ward ex-Congressman Frank Lawler, independent democratic candidate for alderman, is elected. Alderman McGillen, Mayor Hopkins' right-bower, is behind in the Twenty-first ward and the only democratic survivors of the aldermanic cyclone are Stuckart of the Sixth, and Bennett of the Eighth.

Voted for Civil Service Law.

The republicans gave themselves up to delirium of victory and crowds of a thousand in a body marched through the city hall early this morning with horns and drums. The city voted by a majority, estimated at 40,000, to place itself under the operations of the civil service law, which will apply to every department of the city government.

Ran Behind His Ticket.

Roy O. West, republican candidate for city attorney, ran several thousand votes behind his ticket, but was elected by a safe majority. James R. B. Van Cleave for city clerk, Adam Wolf for city treasurer, and Charles G. Neeley for circuit judge on the republican ticket were elected by majorities equal to Swift's.

ST. LOUIS REPUBLICAN.

Democrats Succeed in Saving Only Two of the City Offices.

St. Louis, Mo., April 3.—Yesterday's municipal election turned all the city offices but two over to the republicans. Of the twenty-eight members of the house of delegates chosen two democrats are elected, the remainder being republicans. Six republicans-at-large were elected to the city council, which will now be unanimously republican, as seven republicans are the hold-over members. The average republican majority in a total vote of 53,000 is 12,000. Democratic indifference contributed to this result.

A Disorderly Day.

Rows were numerous and many arrests were made. George Fallgraft, a democratic ward worker, was shot in the breast by Henry Henderson, a colored republican challenger at a pooling booth. Frank Campbell, a democratic judge of election, was arrested for intimidating voters. In his pockets a bundle of 150 false ballots were found.

REPUBLICANS AND WOMEN.

They Were Greatly Successful in the Ohio Election.

Cincinnati, April 3.—Latest and correct reports of the elections in the various cities and towns throughout the state do not change the first intelligence. It was clearly a victory for the women and the republicans. In proportion to their number of candidates, it is estimated that more women were elected members of boards than men. The women did not oppose each other. They defeated men. Mrs. Peabody, wife of Vice-President and General Manager Peabody, of the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern railroad, was elected on the suburban village ticket of Madisonville. There was no election in this city, but in its suburbs the women did well.

Only One Woman Vote at Elyria.

At Akron two women were elected. Only local issues were at stake. The republicans seemed to turn out better than their opponents. At Elyria only one woman voted. At Cleveland the woman candidate for the school council, on the republican ticket, ran behind the three male candidates. At Alliance two independent women running against two straight republicans for board of education, were beaten by nearly 700 majority. The populist women polled 328 votes.

Brideport's Official Returns.

Bridgeport, April 3.—The official return of the Bridgeport election is as follows: For mayor, Frank E. Clark, dem., 5,210; Emory F. Strong, rep., 4,459; city clerk, Fred C. Mullins, dem., 5,345; F. WITH NO SIGNS OF INSANITY.

Mrs. Williams Relates Calmly the Story of Her Domestic Troubles.

Columbus, O., April 3.—Mrs. Elizabeth Williams, who killed her two children at the Park hotel, was examined by Coroner Herbst in inquest. She was perfectly calm and showed no signs of insanity, relating the story of her domestic troubles, the disregard of her husband for her and the children, her conclusion to end her misery and theirs by murder and suicide, and how she carried the plan into effect. A letter found at the house in Grove City, and addressed to her husband, was shown to her by the coroner. Though it was not signed, she admitted that she wrote it. It was a long letter and in it she upbraided him for his cruelty to his family. She said he had never cared for anything but his own pleasure and comfort, and that he would have that at any cost. It was enough that he had sent her soul to hell; he had tried to send the souls of their children there too.

Commissioner Lochren says there is no United States statute to prevent medical examiners in the field from holding the office of coroner.

TOWN AND HOME FAVORITE.

A WONDERFUL PUSSY.

"Nig" Exhibits Great Frenzy at the Sound of the Fire Gong.

There are dogs that howl when the fire gong sounds, and cats that run when the dogs howl, but for pussies to become frightened at the noise that induces the canines to bark is an uncommon thing, and is only practised by uncommon cats. Such a feline is "Nig", blacker in color than night, who makes her abode in the coal office of Boice, Runyon & Co. on Park avenue.

Though "Nig" pays no attention to the regular test blows of the gong at 12 noon and 5 at night, every time the gong sounds for a fire this wonderful pussy seems to become possessed of a wild desire to get into the open air, and if an avenue of escape through a door or window is not immediately provided by some one in the office, she goes around the room as though filled with Mephistopheles himself.

However, Messrs. Runyon and Newman, who are generally in the office, have become accustomed to this peculiar trait of "Nig", and every time the gong sounds they make haste to provide an exit for her. As soon as she gets out into the open air, she scoots into some secluded nook, not to put in an appearance again until all noise has quieted down. Then she comes wandering back, curling her tail and purring as though she was the happiest of all things. These peculiar actions are accounted for by the fact that three years ago when the old lumber yard of Boice, Runyon & Co., situated on the south side of the railroad, was burned, "Nig" had a narrow escape from being cremated while locked in the office, a portion of which was burned. Ever since then she has become filled with complete terror at the sound of the gong for a fire.

How she is able to distinguish the regular tests from the alarms is something that mystifies all who know of her actions, and still more how she ever learned in the first place what the gong signified. For fear that the cat might jump through a pane of glass in the window in her frenzy, she is never permitted to remain in the office after business hours.

"Nig" yesterday gave birth to four tiny pussies, and is now exercising a motherly oversight over her offsprings, too busy to be interviewed when the Daily Press reporter called to see her this morning. Her friends are wondering whether or not she will bring up her children with the same disposition she has evidenced towards conflagrations.

Sons of Temperance.

Howell Division, S. of T., had a splendid meeting last night, and installed the following officers, Sylvester Scribner acting as deputy, and W. R. Mattox as grand conductor:

Worthy patriarch, Sarah A Mattox; worthy associate, Emma Cox; financial scribe, Wm B Ayers; grand scribe, Sylvester Scribner; treasurer, Annie Angleman; chaplain, Anneeta Corwin; conductor, Sarah Koeyer; assistant-conductor, Harry Mattox; inside sentinel, James E Huntington; and outside sentinel, Wm E Koeyer.

—The Consistory of Trinity Reformed Church last night chose Robert Clark delegate primarius, and J. P. Laire secundus, to the Classis for the coming year.

—Good goods at low prices is the secret of Boehm's big trade. His departments are winning popular patronage because one gets more for his money and spends less of it, than at many other stores.

—Tomorrow afternoon at 1 a carload of fine horses, just shipped in from Missouri by C. P. Rider, will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder, without reserve, at the stables of F. A. Pope, 114 West Sixth street.

—One of French's wagons, loaded with hay and feed, broke down on Somerset street this morning. The front left wheel caught in the car track, and when the turn was made the axle broke. Another wagon was substituted, and the damaged one taken to the shop for repairs.

OUR YANKEE GENIUS

CONTRIBUTIONS OF CONNECTICUT TO THE PATENT OFFICE.

Men and Women of the Nutmeg State Are All Handy With the Jack Knife and Bristle With Original Ideas. They Whistle and Whittle.

The inventiveness of Connecticut Yankees is unparalleled. Every year they grow more inventive. A good proportion of the population of the State are inventors and patentees.

Their business in life is to invent things and take out patents for them. Lots of the women of the State are patent holders, and the patents are for their own inventions, too.

In looking over last year's report of the Commissioner of Patents we have noticed that Connecticut yet stands the first among the inventive States of the Union. Why, the patents taken out in that year by the inventors of the Nutmeg State numbered one for every 903 of the State's inhabitants. This was for a single year, mind you; and so, if we add to the patentees of that year those of the previous 20 or 30 years we shall be brought to the conclusion that most of the adult Yankees of Connecticut must be patentees.

But the number of inventors is far greater than that of patentees; for many a Connecticut inventor could not get a patent last year. The Commissioner of Patents at Washington ascertained by inspection of the inventions sent him from Connecticut that plenty of them were not, in his opinion, deserving of a patent.

Some of them were worthless or unimportant or not brand new, or infringed upon patent rights already in existence. Let us, however, count all these unsuccessful applicants for patents as actual inventors, or, at least, men and women of inventive mind, and we shall see that there cannot be room in the State for many inhabitants other than them and the patentees. There is no other State of which this can be said.

It seems that there are cases in Connecticut in which a man patentee is married to a woman patentee. We have heard of a case in which not only the husband and the wife but also two of their children were patentees. They are both aged and youthful patentees in the State. If an inventor be black his or her color is no bar to an American patent.

It is a curious fact that the proportion of patentees in Connecticut is far greater than that in either of the two populous States by which it is bounded. Why is it that Connecticut stands away ahead of New York and Massachusetts at the Patent Office?

OLD PUT AS A DUELIST.

His Two Remarkable Encounters on the Field of Honor.

It is perhaps a fact not very generally known that Gen. Israel Putnam, the Old Put of Revolutionary fame, was the hero of two "affairs of honor."

In those days of frantic Puritanism the custom of risking one's life on the dueling ground was regarded as little short of sacrilegious and held as an offense against both Church and State. However, notwithstanding all this, Old Put was twice "called out."

The first affair grew out of a difficulty with a brother officer, who assumed a belligeren attitude and demanded immediate satisfaction. This Putnam at first refused to give, on the ground that the services of both belonged to the country and that it would be unpatriotic, not to say un-Christian, to risk the loss of two lives except in conflict with the common enemy.

However, as his antagonist refused to be pacified, he at last agreed to meet him "according to usage," without seconds, at daylight, in a neighboring field. Putnam arrived first on the ground, armed with an old gun loaded with slugs. A few minutes later his opponent approached, carrying a small sword and two dueling pistols.

When he was about thirty yards away Old Put sighted him and let fly his choicest assortment of nails and scrap iron. The officer naturally came to a halt and shouted:

"What are you doing, sir? Is this the proper conduct of a man of honor and an American officer."

"What am I about, sir?" returned Putnam; "why, I'm defending my life against a man who is trying to murder me. And if you don't get out in less time than it takes old Heath to hang a Tory you are a gone dog!"

"But, sir, I—".

Bang! went Putnam's musket again, and away went his pugnacious antagonist at a Nancy Hanks rate of speed, but laughing in spite of all his anger and mortification.

Putnam's other affair was with an English officer on parole who took offense at some brisquerie of his and challenged him. A time and place was appointed, but when the Englishman arrived he found Putnam seated on a powder keg, smoking a pipe with the utmost nonchalence. He was motioned to a seat by the offending Putnam, who calmly remarked as he lit a fuse leading into the bunghole of the keg that the chances of them both being blown to perdition was about equal.

This was too much for the Britisher, who made a wild break for the door, while Put called derisively:

"You're just as brave as I took you to be, but you needn't hurry, for there's nothing in this keg but onions. I thought I'd try you with onions first, but you don't like the smell, ha, ha, you don't like the smell!"

But the punctilious Englishman had genteely retired.—Washington Post.

Sings and Dances at 105.

There lives at 1,135 Vine street, Philadelphia, an old Italian woman who might prove interesting to those of her fellow citizens who are interested in the prevailing Napoleonic craze. Mrs. Celestina Nigro, who claims to have attained the great age of 105 years, retains a vivid recollection of the Napoleonic wars, and tells innumerable anecdotes of several battles which took place near her birthplace, Campagna, State of Salerno, Italy. The old woman has been in this country only six years, having taken the journey across the ocean when nearly 100 years old.

She was at first denied permission to land on account of her great age, but she finally passed through the gates of Castle Garden. She has living in America and Italy twenty-one grandchildren and twenty-five great grandchildren. She sings and dances with a vigor and abandon that might well excite the envy of a younger woman.

"LET THE SHOEMAKER STICK TO HIS LAST."

without the slightest alteration.

Their new department for boys will be opened this week, where hundreds of elegant garments will be sold at manufacturers' prices.

GRESHAM IS SILENT

His Friends Deny That He Contemplates Resigning.

He Is Worn Out from the Exceptionally Large Amount of Diplomatic Work Recently, and Will Go to Lakewood, N. J., for a Week or Ten Days To Recuperate.

Washington, April 3.—A vigorous denial is entered in administration circles of the story that Secretary Gresham is about to resign. The secretary himself will not talk on the subject, explaining that he does not care to dignify the report by a denial. It is a fact that the secretary has been in poor health for some time, and his recent attack of neuralgia of the stomach, which was much more severe than was generally understood at the time, has left him much debilitated and in need of rest. This he has been unable to secure in Washington, owing to the frequency with which delicate and embarrassing diplomatic questions have been forced upon him of late.

GRESHAM TO TAKE A REST.

The Secretary Will Go to Lakewood To Recuperate.

Washington, April 3. — Secretary Gresham, whose duties have been unusually confining and onerous for the past month, has made arrangements to go to Lakewood, N. J., for a week or ten days to recuperate. He had more than one severe attack of grip and neuralgia during the winter, which left him too weak to stand the strain resulting from the exceptional number of diplomatic incidents which have recently arisen. Mrs. Gresham will accompany him to Lakewook. The secretary expects to remain in Washington all the summer. Mr. Cleveland's purpose to spend the summer at Gray Gables will necessitate the continued presence of the secretary of state in Washington, and Mr. Gresham within the last few days has perfected arrangements in view of a continued residence here until the end of August, at least, after he shall have returned from his brief visit to Lakewood.

The opinion is concurred in by all the justices.

A Museum in Town.

The Nickel Plate Museum Company have opened a place in the store on East Front street formerly occupied by Druggist J. G. Miller. They have a wonderful collection which will interest everyone.

One of the great features is the "Seal Band", composed of two seals which are trained to do many clever tricks, such as beat drums, smoke a pipe, turn a grindstone, and play tambourines and bells.

A rare species of the armadillo, known as the Brazilian grave-robber, is also on exhibition.

A large collection of prairie dogs, well trained, is a pleasing sight, and two fine monkeys delight the children.

Three beautiful Australian cockatoos with their fine plumage are well worth the price of admission. There is also an excellent collection of alligators, "Florida's best", and a pet rat that is trained to perform many tricks.

J. T. Jordan, the celebrated glass blower, and a fortune teller, are additional attractions to this interesting museum.

The show is open from 1 p. m. to 10 p. m., and the admission is 10 cents

—Fifth street from Watchung to Park avenue, and Park avenue at the intersection of East Fifth street, are torn up today while an unfinished section of sewer and a 3x5 manhole are being built.

Pity the Poor.

Charity is responsible for a great many queer freaks. We are told that a novel scheme to provide bread for the poor was recently successfully tested in Flint, Mich There were 150 competitors among the ladies of the city to see who could bake the best loaf, each contestant to bake three loaves, the winner to receive a valuable prize and the bread to be given to the poor. The winner of the contest was the wife of the Mayor; but God help the poor!—Boston Beacon.

His Name in Place of the Hour Marks.

"The finest watch owned in Louisville belongs to a promising young society man," said a jeweler. "He gave us his order last November and we were to fill it by the middle of February, which we did even earlier, as we cabled the order direct to the Geneva manufacturers. The cost of the watch was $800. The young man ordered it in honor of his twenty-first birthday. On one side of the case is his monogram in diamonds. The other side is a flying bird studded in diamonds, with eyes of rubies. Its weight is sixty-nine pennyweights of 18 carat gold. The works are of first-quality and a minute repeater. Instead of the numerals being used on the dial to indicate the time the letters of the young man's name are used to indicate the time."

Part of a Chicago Boarding House Outfit.

A Chicago woman was buying an outfit for a boarding house on Wabash avenue. She was making all her purchases at one house, as is now frequently the custom.

"And I want two mourning emblems," she said, "a white one and a black."

"May I ask?" inquired the salesman.

"Certainly, but it is all right. They are good things to have in the house. At the last boarding house I ran one of my boarders died and because I didn't have any mourning ribbons on hand the wife of the deceased left me, and they were such good payers, I made up my mind I wouldn't be caught again."

All in One Breath.

"Marmer," yelled one of those dear children occasionally encountered in public vehicles, looking at a young woman with very red cheeks and very dyed hair, "Marmer, why has she got five chimneys on her hat, one on each side and three behind? Yov've only got two and that lady over there has only got one. Say, is that one of the hats they won't let 'em wear to the theater?" His marmer escorted him to the street.—Boston Saturday Gazette.

Acquired Proficiency.

"I wouldn't swear that way," said the kind looking old lady, mildly.

"Bless your soul, ma'am, you couldn't. It takes years of truck drivin' to come anywheres near it," remarked the gentleman whose team had balked across the car track.—Cincinnati Tribune.

EMBEZZLED $100,000

Exposure Follows the Suicide of Elias J. Hale.

He Was Judge of Probate and Town Treasurer of Foxcrost, Me., for Thirty Years and Without a Bond Until Last Year—People Thought Him Wealthy.

Foxcroft, Me., April 3.—Elias J. Hale, judge of probate for many years, who shot himself Thursday, is a defaulter as treasurer of the town of Foxcroft to the amount of about $100,000, as near as can be ascertained at this time. He had been town treasurer for thirty years and without a bond until last year.

Only a Small Portion Reported.

He had hired money as treasurer and made his reports to the town of but a small portion of the money hired. The town officials supposed that an assessment of about $5,000, which the town had voted this spring, would pay the debt in full.

People Supposed Him Wealthy.

It is not known what Hale did with the money, except that he had lived well all these years, and people supposed him wealthy. He had but little visible property. He was buried yesterday. An investigation is now being made.

FRANCE AND ENGLAND.

An Indication of the Excited State of French Feeling.

Paris, April 3.—As an indication of the alleged strained state of public feeling between England and France, it is worthy of note that the Martin and other French newspapers persist in insinuating that the collision on March 30 off Messina, island of Sicily, between two British steamers, the Alvah and the Brinkburn, the latter chartered by the French government as a transport to take troops and munitions of war to the island of Madagascar, was due to England's malice, and that a nation capable of such action should be made to repent it. The Alvah, as cabled at the time, was sunk, and the Brinkburn, which was on her way from Toulon to the island of Madagascar with French troops and munitions of war, was seriously damaged, but succeeded in making the harbor of Messina.

Mrs. Gladstone was presented with a bouquet on behalf of the Women's Liberal association. Replying to the address, Mrs. Gladstone said they owed nothing to her, but all to her husband. Mr. Gladstone, when his wife had finished speaking, said that he must add his thanks to those of Mrs Gladstone, although he was disinclined to interfere with her speech. Continuing, he said; "The fact is, ladies are now taking much to public speech, and if they persevere and keep steadily to it they will beat the gentlemen."

Ex-Speaker Faunce Wounded by a Flobert Rifle Bullet.

At Hammonton a doctor was called aboard the train and went on to Atlantic City with it. He did not attempt to remove the bullet from Mr. Faunce's neck, but the wound is not serious. As the time approaches for the execution, April 22, he seems to be getting worse, and the possibilities are that he may break down."

RECLAIMED FROM DEATH.

The Terror of Man Thwarted.

In the Grasp of that Dread Disease, Consumption.—Life Given Back.—Almost Miraculous.

Fortunately, perhaps, the Consumptive does not realize his own condition. His is a disease of continual waste until he meets a death that is in reality one of starvation.

It is now generally conceded that this disease is incurable,—that is, by any known medicine. Change of climate, or some life-infusing food that will give new flesh, blood, and strength, and induce the various organs of the body to assume their normal functions,—this is the only hope.

The only way to do this effectually is to give the patient Bovinine, that great raw food product, the greatest concentration of the life-giving elements of raw beef known to modern science. In this connection the results obtained by Dr. J. H. Head of Atlanta, Ga., in the treatment of a case of consumption, are interesting.

Dr. Head relates briefly how a man about thirty-five years of age came to him for treatment. He had lost forty pounds in weight in six months; he suffered with a bad cough and experienced severe night sweats; he was unable to do any work; most of his family had died of consumption, and on examination his right lung was found to be seriously affected, and as the doctor remarked, "He was in a good way to have an early funeral."

But note what happened. He was given Bovinine. In two weeks he had gained seven pounds, his appetite had returned, he was able to do a good day's work, and most of the distressing symptoms had vanished; and at the time of writing the doctor felt sure of a complete cure.

This is but one of many similar cases. Bovinine will give new life and strength, make new blood and flesh, stop waste, ward off disease, and turn the current of life's river again into its natural channel. Give it one trial while there is yet hope.

TWO MEN SHOT DOWN

Bloody Election Day at St. Louis and Chicago.

A Democratic Worker Slain in the Former City and His Murderer Escapes with Difficulty from a Mob—Jack Dalton Kills His Cousin at a Chicago Pooling Place.

St. Louis, April 3.—Charles A. Day shot George Thorn through the breast and shoulder yesterday afternoon, inflicting fatal wounds. The scene of the tragedy was in Louis A. Cella's saloon, Twenty-first street and Washington avenue. Day is under arrest, but before being rescued by the police from his pursuers, came near being lynched by the friends of Thorn.

Cause of the Murder.

It was zeal on the part of both men to elect their favorites for the house of delegates in the Seventh ward that caused the shooting. The two candidates in the ward are Louis A. Cella, democrat, and Hirm H. Lloyd, republican. Day was leader of the Lloyd faction, while Thorn looked after Cella's interests. Day had detected a repeater and went with an officer to Cella's saloon to cause his arrest.

A Duel with Pistols.

While in the place Day was assaulted by the Cella crowd, led by Thorn. Both principals drew revolvers and began firing. Thorn fell in the doorway mortally wounded, and Day, running for his life from the Thorn party, took refuge in a business house across the street, where the doors were barred behind him.

All Firing at Day.

Every man in the party was armed and all were firing, but Day escaped untouched. He was identified at the City hospital by Thorn as the man who shot him. The accused claims self-defense. A large detail of police, after making several arrests, cleared the streets.

PRAYER WAS NO EXCUSE.

A Preacher's Plea Does Not Save Him from the Libel Law.

Los Angeles, April 3.—Judge Clark has overruled the demurrer interposed by the Rev. J. C. Campbell in the suit charging him with slandering Miss Tesea L. Kelso, the librarian of the Los Angeles public library, in a prayer offered in the First Methodist Episcopal church, in which he said: "O Lord, vouchsafe Thy saving grace to the librarian of the Los Angeles city library, and cleanse her of all sin and make her a woman worthy of her office." The Rev. Mr. Campbell in his demurrer took the position that his statement was privileged. The court held that a slander can be perpetrated in the form of a prayer as readily as in any other form of speech.

ELECTION MURDER IN CHICAGO.

Jack Dalton Kills His Cousin at a Polling Place.

Chicago, April 3.—During a political row at a north side polling place late yesterday afternoon Patrick Dalton was fatally shot by his cousin, Jack Dalton, and died soon after. The murdered man attempted to stab his slayer before he was shot.

The Anti-Toxine Was Pure.

New York, April 3.—Dr. Parks, of the bacteriological department of the board of health, has analyzed a quantity of the anti-toxine taken from the importation which is alleged to have caused the death of the girl in Brooklyn. The article was sold by Schultzeberger & Koechl, 79 Murray street, this city. They imported it from Germany. The analysis showed that it was sterile of bacteria and could not have caused death.

Woman Voter Dies from Excitement.

Newcastle, Col., April 3.—While Mrs. Thomas Jones was preparing her ballot at a polling place here yesterday she fainted from excitement and fell, striking her head against the floor. She died in a short time, having ruptured a bloodvessel.

Rewarded for Heroism.

Washington, April 3.—Secretary Lamont has awarded a medal of honor to S. Rodman Smith, brevet major and late captain of the fourth Delaware infantry volunteers, for swimming the Rowanty river, under fire, in an attempt to capture a crossing, Feb. 5, 1865. The river was partly frozen at the time and Major Smith was the only one of his brigade that crossed at this place.

In Memory of Frederick Douglass.

Washington, April 3.—At the Fifteenth street Presbyterian church in this city, last night, a large assemblage of colored citizens met in honor of the memory of the late Frederick Douglass. The proceedings were of a semi-religious character, but were interspersed with brief eulogies and speeches from several prominent colored citizens.

Big Sugar Refinery Shuts Down.

New York, April 3.—The Havemeyer sugar refinery in Williamsburg has closed down, and the report got about in Wall street that the shutdown was due to overproduction. The 4,000 employes were told that the refineries would be closed for several days, probably a whole week. It is believed, however, that the shutdown will last for a longer period.

Disappearance of a Young Girl.

Waterbury, Conn., April 3.—Minnie Horan, aged 14, daughter of Mrs. Horan of Jefferson street, has disappeared, and no one seems to know anything of her whereabouts. The case has been reported to the police.

$75,000 Express Steal.

Jersey City, N. J., April 3.—Two men are locked up at police headquarters here who for nearly a year have been robbing the United States Express company to the extent of $75,000.

THE EXPLOITS OF BRIGADIER GERARD

By A. CONAN DOYLE.

[Copyright, 1895, by Bacheller, Johnson & Bacheller]

CHAPTER IV.

It is astonishing—and I have heard many make the same remark—how acute one's senses become at such a crisis as this. I am convinced that at no moment is one living so vividly, so acutely, as at the instant when a violent and foreseen death overtakes one. I could smell the resinous fagots, I could see every twig upon the ground, I could hear every rustle of the branches, as I have never smelled, or seen, or heard, save at such times of danger. And so it was that, long before anyone else, before even the time when the chief had addressed me, I had heard a low, monotonous sound, far away, indeed, and yet coming nearer at every instant. At first it was but a murmur, a rumble, but by the time he had finished speaking, while the assassins were untying my ankles in order to lead me to the scene of my murder, I heard, as plainly as ever I heard anything in my life, the clinking of horse-shoes, and the jingling of bridle chains, with the clank of sabers against stirrup irons. Is it likely that I, who had lived with the light cavalry since the first hair shaded my lip, would mistake the sound of troopers on the march? "Help, comrades, help!" I shrieked, and though they struck me across the mouth and tried to drag me up to the tree, I kept on yelling: "Help me, my brave boys! Help me, my children! They are murdering your colonel!" For the moment my wounds and my troubles had brought on a delirium, and I looked for nothing less than my five hundred hussars, kettle-drums and all, to appear at the opening of the glade.

But that which really appeared was very different to anything which I had conceived. Into the clear space there came galloping a fine young man upon a most beautiful roan horse. He was fresh faced and pleasant looking, with the most debonnaire bearing in the world and the most gallant way of carrying himself, a way which reminded me somewhat of my own. He wore a singular coat which had once been red all over, but which was now stained to the color of a withered oak leaf wherever the weather could reach it. His shoulder straps, however, were of golden lace, and he had a bright metal helmet upon his head with a coquettish white plume upon one side of its crest. He trotted his horse up the glade, while behind him there rode four cavaliers in the same dress—all clean shaven, with round comely faces, looking to me more like monks than dragoons. At a short gruff order they halted with a rattle of arms, while their leader cantered forward, the fire beating upon his eager face and the beautiful head of his charger. I knew of course by the strange coats that they were English. It was the first sight that I had ever had of them, but from their stout bearing and their masterful way I could see at a glance that what I had always been told was true, and that they were excellent people to fight against.

"Well, well, well!" cried the young officer, in sufficiently bad French: "What devil's game are you up to here? Who was that who was yelling for help, and what are you trying to do to him?"

It was at that moment that I learned to bless those months which Obriant, the descendant of the Irish kings, had spent in teaching me the tongue of the English. My ankles had just been freed, so that I had only to slip my hands out of the cords, and with a single rush I had flown across, picked up my saber where it lay by the fire, and hurled myself onto the saddle of poor Vidal's horse. Yes, for all my wounded ankle, I never put foot to stirrup, but was in the seat in a single bound. I tore the halter from the tree, and before those villains could so much as snap a pistol at me I was beside the English officer.

"I surrender to you, sir," I cried, though I dare say my English was not much better than his French. "If you will look at that tree to the left you will see what these villains do to the honorable gentlemen who fall into their hands."

The fire had flared up at the moment, and there was poor Vidal exposed before them, as horrible an object as one could see in a nightmare. "Godam!" cried the officer, and "Godam!" cried each of the four troopers, which is the same as with us when we cry "Mon Dieu!" Out rasped the five swords and the four men closed up. One who wore a sergeant's chevron laughed and clapped me on the shoulder. "Fight for your skin, froggy," said he.

Ah! it was so fine to have a horse between my thighs and a weapon in my grip. I waved it above my head and shouted in my exultation. The chief had come forward, with that odious smiling face of his.

"Your excellency will observe that this Frenchman is our prisoner," he said.

"You are a rascally robber," said the Englishman, shaking his sword at him. "It is a disgrace to us to have such allies. By the Lord, if the general were of my mind we would swing you up to the nearest tree."

"But my prisoner?" said the brigand, in his suave voice.

"He shall come with us to Lord Wellington's camp."

"Just a word in your ear before you take him."

He approached the young officer, and then, turning as quick as a flash, h

THERE WAS POOR VIDAL BEFORE THEM.

fired his pistol in my face. The bullet scored its way through my hair and burst a hole on each side of my busby. Seeing that he had missed me, he raised the pistol and was about to hurl it at me, when the English sergeant, with a single backhanded cut, nearly severed his head from his body. His blood had not reached the ground, nor the last curse died on his lips, before the whole horde were upon us, but with a dozen bounds and as many slashes we were all safely out of the glade, and galloping down the winding track which led to valley.

It was not until we had left the ravine far behind us and were right out in the open fields that we ventured to halt and to see what injuries we had sustained. For me, weary and wounded as I was, my heart was beating proudly and my chest was nearly bursting my tunic to think that I, Etienne Gerard, had left this gang of murderers so much by which to remember me. My faith, they would think twice before they ventured again to lay hands upon one of the Third hussars. So carried away was I that I made a small oration to these brave Englishmen and told them who it was that they had helped to rescue. I would have spoken of glory also and of the sympathies of brave men, but the officer cut me short.

"That's all right," said he, "any injuries, sergeant?"

"Trooper Jones' horse hit with a pistol bullet on the fetlock."

"Trooper Jones to go with us. Sergeant Halliday with troopers Harvey and Smith to keep to the right until they touch the videttes of the German hussars."

So these three jingled away together, while the officer and I, followed at some distance by the trooper whose charger had been wounded, rode straight down in the direction of the English camp. Very soon we had opened our hearts, for we each liked the look of the other from the beginning. He was of the nobility, this brave lad, and he had been sent out scouting by Lord Wellington to see if there were any signs of our advancing through the mountains. It is one advantage of a wandering life like mine, that you learn to pick up those bits of knowledge which distinguish the man of the world. I have, for example, hardly ever met a Frenchman who could repeat an English title correctly. If I had not traveled I should not be able to say with confidence that this young man's real name was Milor Hon. Sir Russell Bart, this last being an honorable distinction, so that it was as the Bart that I usually addressed him, just as in Spanish one might say "the Don."

HE NEARLY SEVERED HIS HEAD FROM HIS SHOULDERS.

As we rode beneath the moonlight in the lovely Spanish night we spoke our minds to each other, as if we were brothers. We were both of an age, you see, both of the light cavalry also (the Sixteenth light dragoons was his regiment) and both with the same hopes and ambitions. Never have I learned to know a man so quickly as I did the Bart. He gave me the name of a girl whom he had loved at a garden called Vauxhall and for my part I spoke to him of little Caralic of the opera. He took a lock of hair from his bosom, and I a garter. Then we nearly quarreled over hussar and dragoon, for he was absurdly proud of his regiment, and you should have seen his curl his lip and clap his hand to his hilt when I said that I hoped it might never be its misfortune to come in the way of the Third.

Corporation Notice.

Notice is hereby given that the following Ordinance has been introduced before the Common Council, read the second time and ordered engrossed preparatory to its third reading, and that it is the intention of the Council to adopt the same.

JAMES T. MACMURRAY, City Clerk.
Plainfield, N. J., March 25, 1895.

AN ORDINANCE

To Create the Office of Inspector of Buildings and to Define his Powers, Duties and Compensation.

The Inhabitants of the City of Plainfield, by their Common Council, do enact as follows:

Section 1. That there shall be appointed by the Common Council within thirty days after the approval or final adoption of this ordinance, and annually thereafter, on the first Monday of February in each year, an officer to be known as Inspector of Buildings, who shall be either an architect, carpenter, mason, or other mechanic. The term of office of every person so appointed shall expire on the first Monday of February following the month of his appointment. His duties shall be such as devolve upon him as Inspector of Buildings by the laws of this State, and this and other ordinances of the City of Plainfield, and his compensation shall be the sum of five hundred dollars per annum. For brevity, said officer is hereinafter designated as Inspector.

Sec. 2. That the said Inspector is hereby charged with the performance of all services necessary to insure the strict enforcement of the ordinances of the city now existing, or that may be hereafter adopted, relating to the erection, construction or alteration of buildings therein. He shall keep a record of all applications for permits and a copy of such drawings as may be necessary to show the construction of the buildings or structures, and a traced copy, or sun print on cloth, of all plans on which permits shall be granted.

Sec. 3. That after any permit shall have been granted as aforesaid, it shall be the duty of the said Inspector diligently to inspect said building while in course of erection, and to see that it is constructed in conformity with the ordinances of the city relating thereto. The said Inspector shall also keep a full and complete record of all buildings in course of erection or alteration, their style and proposed uses, and make a report of the same in writing once a month to the Common Council.

Sec. 4. That for the purpose of ascertaining all violations of ordinances designed for the more effectual prevention of fires, it shall be lawful for him, the said Inspector, whenever he shall have good and sufficient reason to believe that any of such such ordinances are being violated, to enter into or upon any lands or building for the examination of boistways, trap-doors, fire-places, hearths, chimneys, stoves and pipes thereto, receptacles for ashes, ovens, boilers, heaters and chemical apparatus, which may be dangerous as tending to cause or promote fires; and it shall be his duty to direct the owner or occupant of any defective building, by notice signed by said Inspector, to alter the same in such manner and within such reasonable time as he may deem necessary. He shall also examine, at reasonable hours in the daytime, and it shall be lawful for him for that purpose to enter into and upon, all buildings and places where any gunpowder, saltpetre, hemp, flax, tow, hay, rushes, firewood, boards, shingles, shavings, or other combustible materials may be lodged; and whenever he shall discover any violation of any of such ordinances, or anything that is deterimental to public safety, he shall notify in writing the owner or occupants of the building wherein such unlawful or unsafe conditions exist to immediately cause the same to be corrected, and it shall be the duty of the person so notified to comply with such notice. And in case of the neglect or refusal of the owner or occupant of such building, or the possessor of such combustible materials to correct said unlawful or unsafe conditions and to alter, remove or secure the same within the time and in the manner directed in said notice, the person offending shall on conviction thereof pay a penalty of five dollars for each and every day after the expiration of the time in such notice stated he shall neglect or refuse to comply, not exceeding one hundred dollars in any one suit.

Sec. 5. That in case the Chief Engineer of the Fire Department of said city shall be either an architect, carpenter, mason or other mechanic, he may be appointed to said office of Inspector of Buildings, and hold both offices at the same time, and in that case, he shall devote all his time to the performance of the duties of said offices.

Sec. 6. All ordinances or parts of ordinances inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

GROWTH OF THE CHURCH.

Need of Larger Sunday-School Accommodations Among First Presbyterians.

The annual church meeting of the First Presbyterian Church was held last evening, followed by the annual parish meeting. Rev. C. E. Herring, pastor, was Moderator, and J. M. Bettman, clerk of the Session, acted in his capacity.

The election of trustees took place as follows:

J. A. Haynes, 2 years; T. J. Pruden, 3 years; J. H. Havens, 1 year, to succeed F. H. Martin, resigned.

Reports were read from all the church societies, showing them to be in a very flourishing condition both financially and spiritually.

The parish meeting followed. W. J Ladd was chairman, and Howard Pope secretary.

J M Bettman and E M Cave were elected elders to succeed themselves, and Abram L Cadmus was elected elder for the term of three years.

A V Searing and A G Remsen were elected deacons.

At this point the church treasurer, William H Shotwell, and the church choir, were given a unanimous vote of thanks for their earnest efforts in behalf of the church.

It was stated that during the past year the church debt had been decreased considerably, and that at the present time it only amounts to $400.

A communication was received from and signed by the officers and teachers of the Sunday-school, asking for more room to accommodate the school, which had grown so rapidly it was thought to be very necessary that some action be taken as soon as possible. It was also stated by the signers that if the church would furnish the building they would provide the furnishings for it.

After thoroughly discussing the subject, it was unanimously decided that the chairman appoint a committee of five to consider the project.

The committee was not appointed last night, but will be inside of a week.

The church decided that the pastor's salary remain the same, after which the meeting adjourned.

RAHWAY WITHDRAWS.

Leaves the L. A. W. Out of Spite Against Plainfield.

At the meeting of the Crescent Wheelmen last evening the matter of the Decoration Day meet was discussed. It was stated that the Rahway club had withdrawn from the L. A. W. The committee from that body, of which Mr. Gideon is chairman, had not up to the time of the meeting sent any official notice sanctioning the meet for the Crescent Wheelmen, but it was confidently stated that Plainfield was sure of getting it.

The action of Rahway is considered unwarranted, as they have had the meet for several years, and ought to be generous enough to submit to the ruling of the L. A. W. without any interference.

Plainfield will no doubt show that she is able to fill the vacancy caused by the exit of the Rahwegians.

Hillside Tennis Election.

The annual meeting of the Hillside Tennis Club was held in the clubhouse last night, and a large number of members was present.

Officers for the coming year were elected, and some other business of importance was transacted.

The following officers were elected:

President—D. O. Tiffany; Vice-president—Robert L. Burnett; Secretary—Arthur Lovell; Treasurer—Josiah H. Browne; Members of the Governing Committee to serve two years—James P. Murray and Fred W. Walz.

The reports of the various committees showed the club to be in a very flourishing condition, and a successful season is expected.

—The Star, with General Superintendent J. H. Olhausen on board, passed through Plainfield this morning on the Jersey Central.

—In the big shooting tourney at Paterson yesterday T. H. Keller and Neaf Apgar participated in the Passaic Falls sweepstakes, consisting of seven birds, at 28 yards rise, with $5 entrance fee. The former scored 2, and the latter 6.

Those who never read the advertisements in their newspapers miss more than they presume. Jonathan Kenison, of Bolan, Worth Co., who had been troubled with rheumatism in his back, arms and shoulders, read an item in his paper about how a prominent German citizen of Fort Madison had been cured. He procured the same medicine, and to use his own words: "It cured me right up." He also says: A neighbor and his wife were both sick in bed with rheumatism. Their boy was over to my house and said they were so bad that he had to do the cooking. I told him of Chamberlain's Pain Balm and how it had cured me, he procured a bottle of it and it cured them up in a week. 50 cent bottles for sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy, Park and North aves. T. S. WOMEN'S RIGHTS.

Plainfield Voices Heard on This Important Movement.

A special meeting of the New Jersey Women's Suffrage Association was held in the Y. M C. A. parlors, Newark, Tuesday afternoon. After calling the meeting to order the president, Mrs. Florence Howe Hall of Plainfield, asked for a report of delegates to the National convention at Atlanta. One of the delegates, Mrs Phebe Wright of Manasquan, was absent. The other, Miss M. L. Watts of Newark, read an interesting report, which was accepted.

Mrs. Hall read a letter from Mrs. Cott, asking that a committee on general organization be appointed for New Jersey. Mrs. Hall also reported for the Executive Committee, which had sent a petition to the Legislature asking that the word "male" be struck from the State Constitution. The petition had been signed only by the officers of the association; and had been presented by Assemblyman Codding and Senator Voorhees. A supplementary petition, to which 1,000 signatures had been hastily placed, was presented by Senator Parry. It had not been learned that either petition was referred to the Judiciary or any other committee.

Before the report was accepted Aaron M. Powell of Plainfield made some remarks on the educational value of petition work. This was evoked by the reading of a letter from the secretary of the Populist Club of Essex County, who discountenanced petition work. Mr. Powell also suggested that the women do more work in the line of interviewing candidates for legislative offices. No man, he said, should be elected without feeling that the hand of this New Jersey body was upon him.

Dr. Mary D. Hussey reported that the law admitting women to the bar had been obtained. The petition that Miss Philbrook had sent out had been signed by 30 lawyers, every lawyer but one in the Legislature had voted for the bill, and only four persons had voted against it; the press, too, had been favorable to the law.

A resolution from the Executive Board was read, recommending that a leaflet be prepared and distributed throughout the State acquainting women with the fact that not all school meeting privileges were lost to them and giving an account of benefits resulting from women serving as School Trustees. It was decided that the Committee on School Suffrage and Literature prepare and print 2,000 of the leaflets.

Mrs. Hall stated that the Committee on Organization was not idle. She expected to organize Union County May 10, and Passaic County at an early date.

A new standing committee of three was appointed to note and report from time to time on the progress of the woman suffrage movement throughout the world. Mrs. Hester M. Pool of Metuchen, Mrs. Walter A. Huston of Orange and Mrs. Elizabeth S. Hunt of Newark, were elected to this committee.

SPRING CONFERENCE.

Christian Endeavorers Planning for the County's May Meeting.

A meeting of the Executive Committee of the Union County Christian Endeavor Union was held Tuesday evening in the parlor of the Central Baptist Church, Elizabeth. The attendance was large, all sections of the county being represented. George C. Teller, president of the County Union, presided. Reports were made by the chairmen of the various departments, showing all to be doing effective Christian Endeavor work. The Union was never before so well organized, and the condition of affairs reflects credit on the administration of its present officers.

Plans were effected for the Spring conference to be held in May, and President Teller appointed the following committees of arrangement: Programme and place of meeting—Harry D. Wilson, Elizabeth; E. E. Anthony, Plainfield; E. W. Phares, Elizabeth; Mrs. W. S. Lowry, Plainfield; Mrs. J. D. Lowden, Elizabeth. Nominations—F. Woodruff, Plainfield; C. T. Bingham, Cranford; A. B. Wilson, Rahway; J. Beder, Springfield; J. D. Lowden, Elizabeth.

—The meeting of Iona Council last night was devoid of particular important transactions.

—The Independent Fife and Drum Corps will have a rehearsal and business meeting next Tuesday evening.

—Charles Matthews of Grove street has laid a new board walk on the Prospect place side of his property.

Marvelous Results.

From a letter written by Rev. J. Gunderman, of Dismondale, Mich., we are permitted to make this extract: 'I have no hesitation in recommending Dr. King's New Discovery, as the results were almost marvelous in the case of my wife. While I was pastor of the Baptist Church at Rives Junction she was brought down by pneumonia succeeding la grippe. Terrible paroxysms of coughing would last hours with little interruption and it seemed as if she could not survive them. A friend recommended Dr. King's New Discovery; it was quick in its work and highly satisfactory in results. Sold by L. W. Randolph druggist. Regular size 50c and $1; our price 45c and 90c

AT REST.

L. J. Denton.

The funeral services of the late Louis James Denton were held yesterday afternoon at 2:30, at the home on Hillside avenue, which was filled with friends and relatives.

A quartette composed of Miss Gussie Runyon, alto, Miss Bessie Blair, soprano, B. T. Barnes, base, and Elmer E Runyon, tenor, sang very sweetly a favorite selection of the departed, "Nearer My God to Thee". Rev. Dr. D. J. Yerkes then read appropriate Scripture selections. "Sometime we shall understand" was sung, and Dr. Yerkes spoke, in part as follows:

"It is thirty-two years ago since I met the one who today lies silently before us. His spiritual life was one of thorough consistency, and was the unfolding of the life divine. He was a true man. During the many years he had been a member of the church there were very few services that he missed. He loved God's house because it was where God's people met, and he loved to be in such a place. During the many weeks that he was ill no impatient words nor actions were manifested. When asked by a member of the family which he would rather do, stay or go, he replied 'Just as the Lord wills'. We know he was linked with Christ."

The clergyman then related the very touching incident, as told in The Daily Press, connected with the passing away of Mr. Denton, when he asked to see the setting of the sun. Words of comfort and consolation were spoken for the bereaved ones, and they were counseled to find consolation with the Heavenly Father who doeth all things well.

Rev. Mr. Norton of Penn Yan, N. Y., a lifelong friend of decedent, was present and spoke a few words. He said:

"There are two Scripture selections that impress me very much. One of them is 'Wait on the Lord; be of good courage, and he will strengthen thy heart. Wait, I say, on the Lord'. The other is 'Call upon Me in the time of trouble, and I will deliver thee, and thou shall glorify Me'. Perhaps there never was a time in the history of this family when it was so hard to spare one as the present. His counsel is needed. His wife and children need him, and his prayers and sympathies are very much needed. And not only that but the church needs him, and at this season his business also. But God in His all-wise providence has seen best to call him home. I have been a personal friend of Mr. Denton 45 years, and was intimately acquainted with him. When I was a young man, and a student, his home was my home. I was called to Penn Yan during a season of revival services, and I remember so well the time when he gave his heart to the Lord. The one who lies so peacefully and still today was then a lad of 10 years. He united with the church at that time, and I could not help being impressed with his meekness, gentleness and integrity, and his devotion to Christ. And all through his life those same endearing qualities have been shown, and they were strengthened, and permeated his whole life. He was a thoroughly religious man in every detail, and God has taken him for His own glory."

Mr. Norton also spoke comforting words to the family, sympathizing with them in their deep sorrow. He closed with a touching prayer and benediction. "The Christian's Goodnight" was touchingly sung.

Those present then looked for the last time on the form of the departed.

The casket was surrounded with a particularly choice selection of lilies, pansies, and roses formed into handsome wreaths resting on the casket.

A delegation from the W. C. T. U. attended in a body.

The pall-bearers were Halstead Compton, D. F. Randolph, William Benton, and Rufus Case. Interment was private, in the family plot in the Plainfield Avenue Cemetery.

One very handsome floral tribute, of palms and roses, an emblem of victory, was placed in the corner of the room at the funeral. It was the gift of Miss A. E. Lincoln.

PLAINFIELD'S MISSION WORK.

Methodist Women Review Their Share in the Harvest.

The Woman's Home Missionary Societies of the First M. E. Church and the Grace M. E. Church held a joint meeting in Vincent Chapel last night, at which the annual reports of the different subordinate mission bands were made.

The Woman's Auxiliary of Grace Church reported 36 members, who had sent two barrels of supplies to the missionaries working among the poor of the great cities, besides having raised considerable money from socials and other means.

The Queen Esther Band, composed of juvenile members, also of Grace Church, reported 25 members at the end of its first year's existence. The Mothers' Jewels are prosperous with 71 members under 10 years of age, who have raised $8 during the year.

The work of the Woman's Auxiliary of the First Church during the past year has consisted largely in supplying the necessities of life for ministers engaged in the sparsely settled sections of the West. During the year $224 has been received and $222 paid out. Fifty-eight members are enrolled.

The Young Ladies Mission Circle of the First Church reported 29 members, 15 of whom were active. They are preparing for more aggressive work during the year, and intend establishing an auxiliary of younger girls.

After the reports had been made Mrs. May Leonard Woodruff gave an address on the work of the societies in various portions of America, notably in Mexico and Alaska, where there was almost as much difficulty in carrying the Gospel, she said, as was experienced with the heathen of the Eastern Countries. In the United States nearly 300 ministers had been assisted in the Western States, where the communities were unable to sustain them. She said that in Alaska religion must be inculcated into the minds of the natives before education. Mrs. Woodruff also spoke of the efficient work that is being accomplished by the Deaconesses, educated at the training school in Washington, not only among the poor but with the rich as well in the large cities.

A Musical Prodigy.

Last evening Mr. Lindsley amused his hearers with some excellent instrumental music at the Mt. Olive Baptist Church on Liberty street. After a few introductory words, he began his programme with a selection on a harmonica, accompanied by a guitar. After this he took out a common flute and then called two young men, Spencer Conway and Edward Washington, out of the audience and said that he would make them play the flute. This he did in a very laughable manner, playing part of the time himself, and making them play. Next he whistled an imitation of a mocking bird, and accompanied himself on the guitar. In one of his pieces he imitated an express train going at a high rate of speed, and imitated the conductor calling for tickets, also going through a tunnel. This was done on harmonica and guitar.

After a few more excellent selections he closed his farewell evening's entertainment with a selection played on three instruments, the harmonica, autoharp and guitar. The attendance was large and all enjoyed the show.

MR. TERRELL'S PERIL

Narrow Escape from Being Shot in Constantinople.

In the Way of a Fleeing Fugitive's Bullets—One Report Says the Minister Jumped from His Carriage, Caught and Held the Man Who Then Attempted To Stab Him.

Constantinople, April 4.—The United States minister to Turkey, Alexander W. Terrell, narrowly escaped being shot yesterday. A man who was being pursued by the police drew a revolver on the Place Taxim and fired several shots at his pursuers. Mr. Terrell happened to be passing across the square in his carriage as the man fired, and was in great danger of being hit. This caused the minister's cavass to jump from the carriage and seize the man who was firing. The latter tried to stab the cavass, but was overpowered and arrested.

Says Terrell Caught the Man.

London, April 4.—The Morning Post has this dispatch from Constantinople: "A man named Hassan, whom the police were pursuing across Taxim square, in Pera, at about 6 o'clock last evening, turned on his pursuers and fired several shots from his revolver. United States Minister Terrell, who, attended by his cavass, was passing in a carriage, alighted and seized the fugitive, who tried to stab him with a knife. The cavass prevented him, and assisted in holding him until the police came."

She was placed in the county jail yesterday.

Baltimore, Md., April 4.—Captain Louis N. Stodder, of the United States revenue cutter service, is mourning the loss of his celebrated "Monitor" medal. It had been jealously guarded since its presentation by the citizens of Boston thirty years ago, but in some unaccountable manner it has disappeared and the captain is miserable. He is uncertain whether to look for the lost treasure in Washington, New York or Brooklyn.

PEACE FOR THE ORIENT.

Believed That the Negotiations Will Be Closed Within a Day or Two.

Washington, April 4.—The close of the peace negotiations between China and Japan, from all accounts received to-day, is near at hand. So rapidly are the negotiations proceeding that it is believed they will be terminated by Saturday or Sunday next. While no details have reached Washington, it is well understood that Japan will secure practically everything she has asked for—the possession of Formosa, a war indemnity of 400,000,000 yen, the independence of Korea and the possession of that part of the province of Shantun which includes Port Arthur, and a sufficient amount of territory surrounding that place for military and strategic purpose until at least the indemnity shall have been paid.

Russia Will Remain Quiet.

It is again asserted that Russia will make no interference with these conditions of peace. Twice during the past few months Russia has asked of Japan upon what terms she would make peace, and on each occasion she has been made acquainted with Japan's purpose. While no understanding exists between the two countries, it known in diplmatic circles that Russia will be satisfied with whatever conclusions may be reached by the peace plenipotentiaries.

Among other things he says: "The ex-queen is a prisoner up stairs over our barracks, and we are always on guard over her. She is allowed a woman to attend her all the time, and as the natives are all musicians they seem to enjoy themselves. The time is mostly passed in singing and dancing. This is the way the ex-queen is expected to pass the next five years, which is the time of her sentence."

SHE CLAIMS $128,000

Mrs. McDowell Potter Sues the Butler Estate.

Avows She Was Inveigled Into Investing a Large Sum in Stocks of the San Miguel Gold Placer Company—Suits Aggregating Over $1,500,000 Against the Estate.

Pittsfield, Mass., April 4.—One of the heaviest suits ever instituted in this county has just been entered by Warner & Wright, of this city, attorneys for Mrs. Sarah McDowell Potter, of North Adams, against the estate of the late Benjamin F. Butler, the amount involved being over $100,000. In March, 1890, Mrs. Porter held $100,000 worth of real estate mortgages in Illinois, and between that time and September of the same year, acting on the advice of Mr. Butler, she liquidated these securities, realizing the full amount in cash.

Inveigled Into Investing.

The declaration states that she was inveigled into investing $97,994 of this amount in stocks in the San Miguel Gold Placer company of Colorado, of which General Butler was president. Soon after the investment the company went into insolvency, and when the property was disposed of it was bought in by the original company through Butler.

Claims $128,000.

The entire amount sought to be recovered is, with interest, now nearly $128,000. When the case comes to trial some very prominent men will figure in it as witnesses, among them being ex-United States Treasurer Gulfillan, Frank D. Sherwin, of Boston, who was the secretary of the Gold Placer company; T. H. Pierce, of Lowell, whose law office adjoined Butler's and who acted as agent in the transactions, and who is now in Europe, and Judge A. M. Card, of New York, formerly judge of probate in Sharnon, Conn. All of these persons have been at times officers in the defunct Placer company.

Suits Against the Butler Estate.

Frank L. Washburn, of Boston, one of the best known attorneys in the state, is counsel for the administrators of the Butler estate. The estate is valued at over $5,000,000, and it may be interesting to note that at the present time suits have been instituted against the executors in various sums aggregating over one and a half million.

Both his eyes were blackened, his nose was split from top to tip and several ribs were broken. Several of the leaders were tried yesterday afternoon for participating in the row of Monday night. They were found guilty and fined. Others will be tried next week.

GASPING FOR BREATH.

A Catarrh Sufferer's Story of His Torments.

The Wonderful Cure Made by Munyon's Little Pellets.

Mr John B. Albert, of 106 Colgate st., Cleveland, Ohio, says: "For the past six years I have suffered terribly from catarrh in its most disagreeable forms. I had all the disgusting symptoms of that loathsome disease. There was a continual dropping of mucus into my throat, a buzzing and roaring in my ears and violent pains above the eyes and nostrils. My breathing was labored and heavy, and at times, I would be literally gasping for breath. My system was literally broken down from the disease when I began to use Munyon's Catarrh Remedies. I had not much faith in them, but in a very short time a big improvement was noticeable. Now I am thoroughly cured and enjoying better health than I have for over six years."

Have you catarrh? Are you willing to investigate a treatment that cures catarrh by removing the cause? If so ask your druggist for a 25c bottle of Munyon's Catarrh Cure and a 25c bottle of Catarrh Tablets. The Catarrh Cure will eradicate the disease from the system, and the Tablets will cleanse and heal the afflicted parts and restore them to a natural and healthful condition.

Munyon's Homoeopathic Home Remedy Co. of Philadelphia put up specifics for nearly every disease, which are sold by all druggists, mostly for 25c. a bottle.

Those who are in doubt as to the nature of their disease should address Professor Munyon, 1505 Arch st., Philadelphia, giving full symptoms of their disease. Professor Munyon will carefully diagnose the case and give you the benefit of his advice absolutely free of all charge. The Remedies will be sent to any address on receipt of retail price.

WHY AM I SO TIRED?

Why Do I Feel So Miserable in the Spring?

IT IS YOUR POOR CONDITION CAUSING SPRING WEAKNESS.

The Spring a Very Critical Time, Especially if You Are Out of Order.

You always feel worse in the spring. You have lost your old-time snap and vim. Work that you used to do with ease now tires you. You often feel dull, dispirited and without ambition You pass more or less sleepless nights, wake mornings tired and unrefreshed, have little or no appetite for breakfast, your head feels dull, there is a bad taste in the mouth, and your bowels are constipated. You go about your employment with a sense of weakness or weariness, and a distaste for taking hold of your work. Besides, you are nervous, irritable and often "blue" without apparent cause.

Then look to your elf, for weak feeling is the forerunner of exhaustion. Every sleepless moment you pass at night presages days of prostration; every hour you feel weak, nervous, languid, tired, with shattered nerves, trembling limbs, dull head, disordered stomach and irregular bowels may be followed by weeks and months of sickness. Every day you neglect these symptoms may mean years of unutterable misery, or those terrible results, nervous prostration, heart failure paralysis, insanity or premature death.

These symptoms are the warnings that you are running on the rocks of disease, and that unless you seek immediate safety, wreck of brain, nerve and body are inevitable.

W. H. Wakefield, of Montpelier, Vt., writing on this subject says:

"About a year ago my health was very poor. I was very nervous, with a bad feeling in my head and at the base of my brain, extending down the back of my neck. I was thin in flesh, and pale, weak and tired, and unable to sleep nights. I had a terrible deathly feeling which I should describe as a falling sensation, and many times I should have fallen if I had not taken hold of something.

"This condition continued for about three months before I found help. I heard of Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy and commenced using it. Before I had taken one bottle, I felt the good results of it, and before I had used the second, I was entirely cured of all the above troubles.

This wonderful restorative of brain and nerve, Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, will give back to the weakened and exhausted system the strength it has lost. It will impart strength and vigor to the brain and nerves, vitalize and invigorate all the physical powers, and restore you again to that grand degree of lusty strength, of bounding pulse, and strong physical and nerve power, which, by overwork, ignorance or folly, you have exhausted.

It is not a patent medicine, but the prescription of the most successful living specialist in curing nervous and chronic diseases, Dr. Greene, of 35 West 14th st., New York City. He has the largest practice in the world, and his grand medical discovery is the result of his vast experience. The great reputation of Dr. Greene is a guarantee that his medicine will cure and the fact that he can be consulted by anyone at any time, free of charge, personally or by letter, gives absolute assurance of the beneficial action of this wonderful medicine.

WHAT FRYE WOULD DO

Annex Hawaii and Seize Cuba and Canada.

Says We Should Have the Latter Country Even at the Expense of a War with England—Acquisition of Cuba Imperatively Demanded, Commercially and Politically.

Lewiston, Me., April 4.—An interview with Senator Frye on foreign relations is printed here. The senator closes as follows: "I would not submit to any insult, to any aggressions on our rights, to any violation of the Monroe doctrine, to any interference with Hawaii or Samoa so far as our interests are concerned, or with our project of constructing the Nicaragua canal."

"What would be your policy as to the future?"

What He Would Do.

"I would annex the Hawaiian islands at once, improve and fortify Pearl harbor, and lay a cable from there to the Pacific coast. I would maintain our coaling station in Pagoa Pagoa against the world. I would reach out to take whatever in our opinion was, or might be, necessary to our future commercial supremacy, being careful not to violate the laws of nations and able to justify our conduct.

Would Seize Cuba.

If Spain, by her actions at any time, justified us in so doing I would seize and hold Cuba against the world. This island has been nothing but a sponge, to be squeezed by Spain, utterly regardless of the interests of the people living there. Annexed to our country it would soon become a paradise. As the residents are entirely fit for American citizenship, I regard the acquisition of Cuba as imperatively demanded, commercially and politically.

Would Also Seize Canada.

"I would accept Canada as soon as she was ready to come to us, and I would not offer her inducements to stay away as this last congress did. They made her a present of a million of dollars annually as a bonus to remain under the protection of Great Britain, to nag, insult and abuse us. Even if England forced us into another declaration of war I would promptly seize Canada and make her forever a part of this republic."

THE BIMETALLISTS.

Speech of A. J. Balfour—An Argument for the Double Standard.

London, April 4.—The Right Hon. A. J. Balfour, conservative leader in the house of commons, made an address at the annual meeting of the Bimetallic league at the Mansion house. His speech was an argument for the double standard. Among other things he said: "England's present system does not suffice even for her internal commerce, and at a time when we depend upon foreign nations for our very bread, it is the height of folly to attempt isolation in regard to the currency. I believe that the common sense of nations will not long tolerate the present state of affairs."

SHAKEN BY EARTHQUAKE.

Houses Wrecked and People Killed in Tuscany.

Rome, April 4.—Tuscany has been shaken by earthquakes several times this week. At Tredizio a dozen houses collapsed. Seven dead bodies have been removed from the ruins and eight persons are missing. At Montepulciano, in central Italy, roofs were shaken down and three buildings were wrecked. Two persons were killed and ten or twelve were injured.

Y., April 4.—State superintendent of Instruction Croker has received a telegram from the Columbian Liberty Bell committee notifying him that the great liberty signal will be struck upon Liberty Bell at 12 noon, Friday, April 5 next, in honor of the centennial of the establishment of public schools in New York. The "signal" will be struck by children of "Sons of New York" in Chicago, where the great Liberty and Peace Bell now is.

New York, April 4.—Central office detectives are in high spirits to-day over their success in solving the Sixth avenue murder mystery—securing the identity of the victim, running down the murderer and getting a full confession of the crime. William Cæsar, the slayer of Mary Martin, is in custody, and with the facts at hand justice will have no trouble in dealing with him.

Strangled Her With His Hands.

The couple lived together on 27th street and, on account of his extreme jealousy, they quarreled constantly. On Friday night last during one of their quarrels Cæsar threw the woman to the floor, held her down with his knee and strangled her to death with his hands. Fearing she might come to he tied a piece of cheese cloth tightly around her neck.

Work of the Fiend.

Leaving his victim on the floor, the fiend went to bed and slept soundly until morning, when he got up, locked the room and went to his work in a hat store. At noon he came home, looked at his victim and returned to work. When he went home in the evening, he borrowed a cleaver from a friend. He stripped the woman of her clothing and began to cut up the body. This completed, he tied the body in pieces of carpet, and taking it on his shoulder boarded a Sixth avenue car, intending to throw the bundle into the river. As the car only went as far as Waterly place he got off, and, watching his chance, threw it in the yard where it was discovered.

A DUAL GOVERNMENT.

Portsmouth's Two Forces of Policemen Still Patrolling the Streets.

Portsmouth, N. H., April 4.—Two different forces of policemen—the old organization appointed by the aldermen, and the new force sworn in by the new board of police commissioners—are still patrolling the streets of this city, and it is not expected that there will be any change in the situation until next week, when the court will consider the matter. Mayor Berry refuses to recognize the power of the police commission, while Judge Emery says he will not consider any cases presented for trial by the old police force. Chief Engineer Murden, of the fire department, has ordered the old force to retain the keys of the fire boxes and respond in case of fire. The new policemen are patrolling their beats without badges, uniforms or other equipments, but have made no arrests yet.

The Northwestern National bank is a bank of ample means, with capital and reserves amounting to $1,500,000, and is one of the most conservative institutions in Chicago. Griffin's shortage will not effect the standing of the bank, and there is no excitement.

VERY QUIET ELECTION

Republican Ticket Successful in Rhode Island.

Lippitt's Plurality Nearly 11,000—Democrats Gain One Senator—Republicans Will Have a Big Majority in the Assembly—The Result at Providence and Newport.

Providence, R. I., April 4.—The election in Rhode Island for state officers yesterday was very quiet. It rained during the forenoon, but cleared in the afternoon. The democrats generally were slow in getting to the polls, and even the clearing weather in the afternoon failed to bring out anything like the normal democratic strength. Voting almost everywhere favored the republican candidates.

Lippitt Elected Governor.

Charles Warren Lippitt (rep.) was elected governor over George L. Littlefield (dem.) by 10,600 plurality. The remainder of the republican state ticket, Edward Allen, for lieutenant-governor; Charles T. Bennett, secretary of state; Edward C. Dubois, attorney general; Samuel Clark, general treasurer, are all elected by pluralities of about 10,000.

Providence and Newport Republican

The republicans carried Providence, and their assemblymen will have pluralities ranging from 2,500 to 3,200. The republicans elected their entire assembly ticket in the four cities of the state—Woonsocket, Pawtucket, Central Falls and Newport—by pluralities ranging from 250 to 600.

Democrats Gain One Senator.

The new assembly will include thirty-two republican senators, sixty-nine republican representatives, three democratic senators and and three democratic representatives. This is a gain of one senator for the democrats. Dr. L. F. C. Garzin, the well known labor worker was elected to the assembly.

WILDE'S LIBEL SUIT.

His Case Against Lord Queensberry Now On at the Old Bailey.

London, April 4.—The criminal libel suit instituted by Oscar Wilde against the Marquis of Queensberry, now being heard at the Old Bailey, is attracting great crowds of nobility and club men. The defendant when called to the bar pleaded not guilty, adding that the so-called libel was true, and had been made known in the interest of public morality. Wilde in his testimony explained his relations to Lord Queensberry's son and was cool under cross-examination as to his morals. A letter of endearing terms from the plaintiff to Lord Alfred Douglas was read in court.

NIAGARA FALLS POWER.

What the City of Buffalo Will Demand for Herself.

Buffalo, April 4.—In secret session a sub-committee of the city council prepared a report upon the franchise which has been solicited by the Niagara Falls Power company permitting that company to lay electric wires throughout the city. The company sought a franchise for twenty-five years, but there was a public outcry against granting such permission for a long term, and the committee has compromised on fifteen years. The committee will also recommend that the council demand a fixed rate of charges for the city of Buffalo by which power will not exceed $20 per horse power per year.

Got the Trophy, Without Honor.

The Y. M. C. L. A. of Elizabeth were last night awarded the Journal League bowling trophy, through a spiteful and unsportsmanlike attitude against the Plainfield Bowling Club. Plainfield's splendid bowling entitled her to the trophy; but after vainly seeking to overthrow Plainfield's claim through various other schemes the Y. M. C. L. A. had two Plainfield games thrown out on the technical point that in them one of the bowlers was Emmons, who was a resident of North Plainfield, outside the county.

For their exhibition of petty malice the Y. M. C. L. A. will be shunned henceforth by the Plainfield bowlers, who are praised on all sides for their manly bearing in the face of an unjust decision.

Niece—That's all right, but these dull times everything is going at quarter off, you know.—Detroit Free Press.

Realism in Reading.

At a reading by George W. Cable at Pittsburg the other day occurred the line: "Let me see, when I was here before did I tell you the story of Solongadon?"

This was given in Mr. Cable's peculiar conversational style. Promptly came the answer, in a woman's voice, from the middle of the hall:

"Yes, sir."

The audience broke into peals of laughter and when the merriment subsided Mr. Cable said, apologetically:

"But I want to tell that story again," which he proceeded to do.

THE CONSUMPTIVE SPOTTER.

A Man Rides from New York to San Francisco and Leaves His Trail.

After eighteen years' continuous service with a railway company a passenger conductor of Chicago has been "let out." The circumstances leading up to his discharge by the company are of a kind calculated to arouse the wrath of railway employes, although the ex-conductor himself accepts his dismissal good naturedly. "He was not the only one," as the comic song has it.

Not long ago a tall, emaciated man traveled from New York almost to San Francisco without paying fare. He introduced himself to the conductor running west from New York as an ex-conductor, and said he had very little money, but that he hoped to get to California, where he believed his life could be prolonged.

He said he was suffering from consumption and his appearance bore out the story. He showed a knowledge of railway business and the conductor believed his story. He was "dead headed" to the end of the first run, and the first conductor was good enough to "fix it" with the conductor who came on to take his place. He reached Chicago and proceeded westward on one of the well known lines. The Chicago conductor had been informed of the facts in the case and consented to carry the sick man, even though it was a violation of the rules.

Within two weeks after he had been so obliging he received his discharge. Upon an investigation he learned that every conductor who, out of the goodness of his heart, helped along the broken down railroad man had been discharged. The consumptive was a spotter.

It is said that in his entire journey from New York to San Francisco only one conductor remained unaffected by his piteous story. This was the conductor on the last run, ending at San Francisco, and he alone retains a job. Yet if the traveler had been a consumptive railroad man attempting to reach the bland climate of the coast the conduct of the last conductor would have been condemned by 99 out of every 100 railway employes.

Among trainmen it will be held that the conductors lost their places because they showed a humane disposition to help along a "boy" who was in hard luck. The companies justify their action upon the ground that the conductors disobeyed a strict rule. The spotter has no explanation to offer under any circumstances.—Chicago Record.

Mr. Wilson Was Finally Let In.

Under the rule of the department the Treasury building is not open to the general public after 2 o'clock in the afternoon. At each doorway is a watchman who admits only persons supplied with passes and officials who can identify themselves as entitled to special privileges. A member of Congress or a cabinet minister on presenting his card or stating his position will be admitted; to other persons the watchmen are properly indifferent. One afternoon after 2 o'clock had struck and the doors were manned as usual a diffident looking man with iron gray hair and flowing mustache sought entrance and was denied admittance. He got in finally, and later on in the office of the controller of the treasury detailed his experiences.

"I started to tell the watchman I was a member of the House of Representatives, but then I recollected that it was after the 4th of March and the people of my district had neglected to send me back to represent them. Then I thought I would say I was a member of the Cabinet. I had it on my lips, but felt the man might throw me down stairs. Of course I have been confirmed by the Senate as posmaster-general, but I will not qualify for some weeks yet. To tell the truth I didn't know just how to satisfy that watchman and it began to dawn on me I wasn't much of anything. So I just told him my name was William L. Wilson, of West Virginia, and he let me in."—Chicago Tribune.

Divorced Because of Religious Belief.

A divorce case involving an unusual state of affairs was decided in Cleveland, O., by Judge Hutchins in favor of the husband. John M. Kinner commenced an action some time ago against Sophia P. Kinner for divorce on the ground of desertion. They were married in Vernon, N. Y., in November, 1874, and there is now living one daughter about 18 years old.

For several years the couple lived together happily, but in the winter of 1886 Mrs. Kinner became an enthusiastic Seventh Day Adventist, and in November, 1892, she went to Battle Creek, Mich. Her husband did everything in his power to induce her to return to his household, but she maintained that, while she thought just as much of him as she ever did, the tenets of the religion she had embraced prevented her from doing so. The proof showed that she had often admitted that her husband was affectionate and kind. During the taking of the testimony it came out incidentally that the daughter is just as enthusiastic on the subject of Seventh Day Adventism as is her mother. An absolute divorce was granted by the court.—Cleveland (O.) Leader.

FEEDING A CIRCUS.

BREAKFAST FOR A THOUSAND MEN PREPARED IN 25 MINUTES.

The System by Which a Firm of Caterers Accomplishes a Big Job. Tent Men With Great Appetites. An Elaborate Dinner.

Almost every boy can remember his first glimpse of the circus, with its huge canvas and the feeling of awe, almost of reverence, with which he looked upon the snowy mountain that had risen like a mushroom during the night. The average country boy regards the coming of the circus as one of the great events of each year, and it is the reward which his parents offer for good conduct and proficiency at school.

Probably the first thought which agitates the mind of the provincial is how and in what manner are the great army of performers, tent men and drivers fed, for there are almost a thousand men in the employ of such great aggregations as Barnum & Bailey send upon the road each year. They outnumber in population some of the villages in which they hoist their tents, relying upon the surrounding country for additional patronage, and they could not be supplied with the huge quantities of food necessary for the nourishment of such a throng by the local dealers.

The catering to the great circuses of the country is a distinctive feature of the show business, and, like all departments of the circus, it is systematic to a degree.

The Barnum & Bailey hosts are fed by two young men, residents of New York city, who, together with a corps of cooks and scullions are willing to back themselves against the world for their excellence in cooking. When the schedule for the show is arranged the caterers, both of whom are in the neighborhood of 30 years of age, make out their programme. A contract is made with one of the largest grocery houses in New York to furnish the flour, sugar, butter, tea, coffee and other articles in its line, and the meats are supplied by a Chicago firm. To each is given a tabulated schedule showing the places to which to send so many pounds of this and that on certain dates.

Three or four days before the show leaves New York the junior member of the catering firm goes to the next point at which a stand will be made and prepares for the coming of the band. The caterer's wagons, containing the most improved appliances for cooking, are loaded first, and they are the first to be removed from the cars. They are driven to the grounds at a rapid rate, fires are lighted at once, savory steaks and chops are broiling in a moment, and in a few minutes the air is redolent with the aroma of coffee which is being prepared in the largest urn ever made for that purpose.

By the time the tent men reach the ground and unshackle their horses breakfast is ready, the tents in which the cooking is done and the meals are served having been hoisted into place while the meal was being prepared. On an average it is twenty-five minutes from the time the camping ground is reached until the several hundred men are sipping their coffee. Sipping is hardly the word so far as the tent men are concerned, for some of the robust men who take a hand in the little game known as "Hey Rube" drink as many as ten cups of the beverage at a sitting.

The tent men, great, rough, hard handed chaps that manage to have some fun at all times, the caretakers of the horses and the drivers sit at one of the long tables and perform gustatory feats that would make a dyspeptic long for the possession of such a stomach and enormous digestive powers possessed by these rugged specimens of mankind.

Their food is served on heavy porcelain crockeware made in Germany, and guaranteed to withstand the roughest usage; in fact, it is well nigh impossible to smash it. The performers and the managers of the various departments sit apart from the rough and bluff element. Their service is of china and they have many of the accessories that would be looked for in the dining room of a large hotel. The women and men who do deeds of daring on horseback or the rapeze when robbed of their spangles and silken tights are much the same as ordinary folks. In the morning they are heavy eyed, for the show generally reaches the camping ground between 4 and 5 o'clock, and breakfast is served immediately no matter what the hour is.

The morning meal usually consists of oatmeal or hominy, steak, chops, eggs, beans, coffee and bread and butter. The luncheon which is ready at 11:30, so that all may be fed before the opening of the afternoon performance, is slightly more elaborate. The dinner which is set for 4:30 is the supreme effort, and the caterers announce with no small degree of pride that they furnish ten different kinds of meats for the meal, not to mention desserts of pies, puddings and other trifles that have no terrors for the canvasmen, although they are severely let alone by those who have to keep down corpulence, for turning a dozen somersaults in rapid succession is a task of no inconsiderable proportions.

As soon as dinner is over the cooking utensils, tables, and other paraphernalia are packed and replaced upon the car for transportation. The same scenes are repeated at the next town. The managerie with its hundreds of wild beasts are fed by the caterers also; that is those of the animals that are carnivorous. The partners have made money on their scheme. Their contract with the Barnum & Bailey aggregation is to feed so many men at so much a head, and a system of meal tickets is in use, each pasteboard being good for one meal, whether breakfast, luncheon or dinner.

Intimidating Voters.

"The charge against the prisoner is intimidating voters," said the judge. "Did he use actual violence?"

"Not actual violence, your honor," replied the prosecuting attorney, "but it was intimidation nevertheless. He was at the polls in the interest of the Republican ticket. He had a live mouse in his pocket, with a string tied to its tail, and when a Democratic lady arrived to vote he would let the animal run across the floor. Your honor can imagine the result."—Harper's Bazar.

TO CULTIVATE WASTE PLACES.

Organizing to Plant Potatoes Within the Borders of New York City.

The Committee on the Cultivation of Vacant Lots by the unemployed, an auxiliary committee of the New York Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor, will send out an appeal for funds to carry on a novel plan to help men to help themselves.

They will follow a plan which was successfully inaugurated by the Mayor of Detroit. This is to put unemployed men who are worthy, at work upon pieces of land, in which will be planted potatoes and other vegetables. The crop will be sold and the money it brings will be given to the man who has tilled the ground.

William Steinway has placed at the disposal of the committee four plots, about 300 acres. Ex-Mayor Hrwitt has also contributed about 50 acres.

The 350 acres of land now at the disposal of the committee, together with what other land may be given, with the exception of a large plot which will be held in reserve, will be divided into plots of one-quarter of an acre each, and one plot will be given to each worth applicant. The land, of course, will not be owned by those who work upon it, as it is only loaned by the contributors to the committee.

If the applicants for work have not enough money to support them while they are working the ground they will be put to work on the reserve plot, and paid enough money to tide them over the summer.

One of the stipulations of the lease of the land to the men is that at least one half of each plot shall be planted in potatoes. The other half may be planted with any other vegetable, and the lessee will be furnished with the necessary seeds and the implements with which to till the ground.

J. W. Kjelgaard, a practical farmer has been made superintendent of the farms, and his knowledge of the business will help the men who never before tried their hand at farming. To the uneducated the work of plowing would be a barrier, but this difficulty has been done away with by the committee, which has had the land plowed.

When the potatoes and other vegetables are gathered in the committee will see that the produce reaches a good market. It is estimated that each acre will yield between 400 and 450 bushels of potatoes, and at the market price the produce of one-quarter of an acre will bring in a snug little sum.

The plan was tried in Toledo in 1894 with great success. Other cities that contemplate trying the scheme are Minneapolis, Passaic, Detroit, Los Angeles, St. Paul, Syracuse, Chicago, Buffalo and St. Louis.

A BUFFALO SAMSON.

Four Hebrew Clerks Put Up a Job to Test His Strength and Lost $28.

The examining surgeons of the 65th Regiment, National Guard, found a Samson in Buffalo a short while ago. Among the candidates examined was Bert Bartram, a cartman, about 33 years old. When he had stripped for the examination he sat on a chair and told the physician to stand on his ankle, and then apparently without any great effort raised his legs until they stood like parallel bars, and held the doctor in the air for two minutes.

Four Hebrew clerks in a wholesale clothing store found this Samson a short time before that. They knew that he prided himself on his strength and put up a job on him. He gets the wages of two men on account of his great strength.

The other day Bartram was delivering some heavy cases at the clothing house and lifted the cases on and off the dray without the aid of skids. One of the salesman pointed to a big case on the floor and asked Bartram if he could lift it. They told him it held 700 pounds of cloth. He offered to bet that he could, and agreed to return as soon as he had delivered the other cases on the wagon and do the trick for them.

While he was gone the young men emptied the case and drove four long nails through the bottom of it into the floor, and then went into the cellar and clinched the nails. Then they returned the goods and waited for Bartram. He appeared at the appointed hour, strode over to the case and grabbed hold of it. It didn't budge.

"Sure there's only 700 pounds in it?" he said.

The young men assured him that that was all it contained, and then offered to bet him that he could not lift it. He put up $20 against $20 raised by the four clerks. Then he removed his coat, fastened his big hands on the case, gave a powerful tug and the case rose in the air with a crackling of timber and a cloud of dust. Six square feet of floor came up with the box.

Bartram pocketed the money and after reproving the young men for the attempted fraud went away. The carpenter bill of $8 was paid by the crestfallen clerks.

The Burglar's Blunder.

A curious story is told by a Vienna correspondent. A young man, the representative of a large firm, who carried a large sum of money with him, recently spent the night at a hotel at Pressburg. As usual he remained some time smoking in bed. Suddenly the burning cigar fell to the floor. He bent over to extinguish it, when he saw a hand projected from under the bed put the cigar out. It made him very uncomfortable. He lay awhile and then, saying aloud, "How very cold; I shall get my fur coat," he jumped out of bed, flew to the door and cried for help. The would-be robber was caught. He confessed he knew the occupant of the room had money which he hoped to get while he slept. He had been a fireman formerly and could not resist the impulse to extinguish the burning cigar.

THE SUN'S FASHIONS.

A FORECAST OF THE PROPER STYLES FOR THE COMING SEASON.

Crinoline Scare Again. Something Had to Be Done to Distend the Ever Widening Skirts. The New Skirts Worn Over Hoops or Faced with Haircloth.

The crinoline scare has come around once more to disturb the peace and comfort of all womankind, but as it has manifested itself annually for several years without serious results it ought not to create a panic in the world of fashion. The increasing width of the skirts and the numerous devices invented to distend them have been so subtle in their warning of the dreaded crinoline that it has come like a thief in the night among the imported gowns. It comes, not in the guise of the old time wired cage, but more modestly arranged with a few hoops run in around the bottom of a silk skirt. They answer every purpose of distension, and are very suggestive of possibilities in that direction. The gown worn over the skirt is cut with many gores, fitting closely around the hips and flaring widely at the bottom, where it is faced up about ten inches with crinoline and silk. It is entirely without lining above.

All the new skirts, whether they are worn over hoops or faced or interlined with hair cloth, are cut either with many gores or circular in shape, so they flare extensively and have very little fullness at the waist. To make them seven or eight yards around the bottom, and still have them fit like a glove around the hips, requires very wise attention. So the cutting and fitting of a fashionable skirt has become a difficult problem in mathematics, which is solved only by the expert dressmaker. But it is the medium skirt of five yards around, not the exaggerated one, which is to be the favorite for summer gowns, and it is made up simply with a silk lining and a haircloth or crinoline facing at the foot.

Although sleeves have increased in size they droop more toward the elbow, and are not raised at all above the shoulders. The newest mutton leg sleeve is cut very wide above the elbow and very close to the arm below, so they have almost the effect of a huge puff. Some of them are caught down in the center to look like large bows. They are cut very long as well as wide. A becoming style for a thin wrist is cut in two points at the wrist with a frill of lace gathered inside to fall over the hand.

Striking and unique combinations of color and materials are a feature of the spring fashions—pale blue and purple, mauve and pink, olive, with yellow and navy blue, are mixed up together regardless of all the rules of harmony in color. Crepons and fancy silks are the materials most employed for dressy spring gowns and they are made with fancy waists of some contrasting color and fabric, or with waists like the skirts. A stylish gown of the latter variety is made of navy blue crepon, and trimmed with a guipure lace yoke and olive green ribbon. Another, of brown crepon has a waist of ecru linen embroidered batiste, made over magenta red satin, which also forms the belt, and a collar with a loop falling down from each side in the back in a novel fashion. The sleeves are like the skirt in this instance, but they are quite as fashionable if they match the bodice.

Plaid silks in gorgeous colors are used for waists to be worn with satin and black grenadine skirts, and these bright plaids are also used for the under dress of thin black grenadines, which softens the colors very prettily and yet show the plaid through. Jet is used for the trimming. Jetted and spangled net and laces of all kinds are seen in great profusion in the latest wraps and gowns.—N. Y. Sun.

If linen is ironed at home great pains should be taken to make the corners of cuffs very sharp. They should be ironed flat.

If a Poor Man Forgets It is Always the Very Things Wanted.

He came home the other night fire from a busy day's work, and his wife waited till he had got his overcoat off and had sat down.

"Did you get that piece of silk I asked you to bring up to-night?" seeing he had not laid it before her.

"Yes, dear; I left it out there in the hall."

"Did you get the pins?"

"Yes, dear."

"And the ribbon?"

"Yes."

"And Bobbie's shoes?"

"Yes."

"And the whisk broom?"

"Yes."

"And a wick for the kitchen lamp?"

"Yes."

"And some matches?"

"Yes; they are with the other bundles."

"And did you see the man about the coal?"

"Yes; it will be up on Monday."

"And the man to see the grate in the dining room?"

"Yes; he's coming as soon as he can."

"Did you see Mrs. Smith about the sewing society meeting?"

"She said she'd come."

"And—oh—oh, yes, did you get a new shovel for the kitchen stove?"

"N—n—no," he hesitated; "I forgot."

"What!" she cried. "What did you do that for? You know that we needed that shovel and I told you about it the very first thing when you went away this morning. I do think men are the most forgetful and carelessest creatures that ever lived." And she flopped out to see about the supper.—Philadelphia Press.

AMELIA RIVES IN WINTER.

How the Authoress Looks to a Philadelphia Insurance Man.

"I was down in Cobham, Va., recently," said Joseph Logan, an insurance man from Philadelphia, "settling up some losses, and I saw Mrs. Amelia Rives Chanler in all the glory of a Northern winter day. The weather was extremely cold and the snow was hard and packed, making the sleighing as excellent as I have ever seen it in higher latitudes. Mrs. Chanler was staying, I am told, at her father's estate, 'Castle Hill.' She came into Cobham driving a pair of half wild thoroughbred bays to a fine sleigh. The team didn't seem to like the cold at all, and when they were brought to a stop there was mighty plunging and pawing and some of those standing by feared the sleigh would be overturned.

"But Mrs. Chanler knew what she was about, and sat up with a firm grasp on the reins until the horses evidently were out her patience, for she took up the whip and gave them three or four sharp cuts that brought them to their senses in short order. Then she jumped out, leaving the team unattended. Her husband is an idol of the Cobham people. Grace Church, the Episcopal place of worship here, was lately burned, entailing a loss of $30,000, but, thanks to Mr. Chanler, there was an insurance of $12,000 on it, which he had carried on his own personal responsibility for several years."

Judge Culberson of Texas.

If a new international monetary conference is be called one of the delegates thereto chosen by the late Congress will create somewhat of a sensation in Paris, Berlin, Brussels or wherever the conference may be held.

Congressman Culberson, of Texas, is a character. He has a method of speech and a method of dress all his own. He buys his clothing ready made and always contrives to select garments which could not by any possibility be made to fit him. He wears a turn down collar and an old fashioned black cravat. He loves to sit with his chin nestling in his shirt bosom and the latter, owing to an over energetic tobacco chewing habit is not always immaculate.

In conversation Judge Culberson is a true Southwesterner. He has no scruples about saying "I don't," and "I seen it." "A heap," is one of his favorite expressions, and he invariably says "cat'ched" instead of caught. He loves to speak of "injuns," and his discourse is full of quaint and homely similes and by-words. Notwithstanding these peculiarities he is a man of great ability, though not of great energy. He is as lazy as careless, but when roused he is both learned and witty enough to enable him to take care of himself in any company. If any of the foreign delegates attempt to have any fun with this homely but brainy Southwestern statesmen they will be sure to discover a Tartar.—Chicago Times-Herald.

Lesson For the Week Beginning April 7. Comment by Rev. Walter J. Yates. Topic, Job's Piety and First Trial.

SCRIPTURE READINGS.—Job i, 1-22.

Three months have been spent in the study of Old Testament symbols and New Testament interpretations. In all the worship of tabernacle and temple we found that the Christ of God was foreshadowed as high priest and sacrifice for sin. "Christ In All" was the topic of the quarter. It is appropriate that we now consider the subject of "Man Sinning and Suffering," which is the topic of the Bible study for the next three months. The lessons are taken from the book of Job. This is one of the most interesting books in all the volume of Christian Scriptures. It will well repay careful study. Many commentaries and explanations have been written, but nothing can be a substitute for careful reading and thought upon the word itself.

Much useless speculation has been expended on the question, "Was Job a real person?" Are the first chapter of the book and the conclusion of the last chapter true as history, or are the facts related imaginary? Endless debate can be indulged on these points, but all to little profit. The value of the book lies deeper than these things. The problem of human suffering and divine justice is the all absorbing theme. It is the question which has pressed for solution in all ages since men began to think of an Almighty Governor in the affairs of men. What is the relation of suffering to sin, and how does God stand over against the world of men in these things?

All piety and reverence are involved in the issue. What the man is in religious character will depend largely upon the view he takes of these matters. The lesson for this week opens the drama with disasters which wrecked the material prosperity of Job. Under all his trials and losses and sorrows he still preserves his integrity and trusts unwaveringly in God. In devout submission he recognizes God as righteous. "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away. Blessed be the name of the Lord."

Work or Die.

No chapter ever died of overwork. Some are in danger of dying of paralysis. Every one should do something in each department. Not all members can be interested in every branch of work, but each can do something. It is a serious mistake to entirely neglect any one of the great departments. A chapter which works exclusively in the devotional line and holds only prayer meetings may be much less spiritual than it would be if literary and social work also received attention. It is dangerous to starve any part of the nature. Narrowness is no mark of piety and may lead to censoriousness and even bigotry. Intelligent piety is our aim. The well rounded League is the strong League.

In Other Lands.

A chapter of the League was recently organized in Belfast, Ireland. This is the most Methodistic and thrifty town in the island. In Japan the native preachers are much interested in League work. Dr. Sturatz has been appointed secretary for India and Malaysia. One hundred charters have been forwarded to him to be issued to chapters in that field. A League paper is to be issued in Norwegian language. The constitution, bylaws and pledges have been translated into Spanish, Italian, Japanese and Norwegian, and charters will be issued in those languages. The German Leagues are numerous and full of zeal. We have several junior Leagues in Mexico, Norway and China.

Practical Mercy and Help.

One of our Leagues recently furnished the physicians of the city with 100 postal cards, accompanied with this request:

"DEAR DOCTOR—Please use these cards to inform us of cases which come under your observation where we can serve the needy or suffering. We will gladly furnish delicacies of any kind, medicine or watchers when needed. We offer our services without regard to the church affiliations of those who need our help."

This is a sample of the ways our young people are finding to make their sympathy with the suffering really helpful.

Getting Ready.

Chattanooga is preparing for a grand convention in June. The portraits of the local committee are published in a recent issue of The Epworth Era. The hotels on Lookout mountain and the homes of the citizens will be utilized. Some are planning to camp out on the mountain. A good time is assured all who attend. Reduced fares on all railroads are secured, and many excursions are planned. It will be such an occasion as was never before seen. It will be a meeting not for sentimentality, but there will be plenty of deep, true Christian sentiment.

The Ministry of Pain.

Mysterious it often seems that we are called to suffer so much pain of body and perplexity of mind. When tempted to despondency, it is strengthening to remember that Christ suffered more for us, and that his Spirit will give grace for every hour of trial. Pain becomes blessed to us if it only brings the consciousness of his favors.

Spiritual Work.

All work should be truly spiritual. Mercy and help, literary and social, and surely the financial work should have the deep true spirit of devotion pervading and consecrating all.

Cheerfulness.

'Tis well to work with a cheerful heart
Wherever our fortunes call,
With a friendly glance and an open hand
And a gentle word for all.

Since life is a thorny and difficult path,
Where toil is the portion of man,
We all should endeavor while passing along
To make it as smooth as we can.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic For the Week Beginning April 7. Comment by Rev. S. H. Doyle.

TOPIC.—Things to be consecrated.—Ezra iii. 1-7.

The children of Israel have returned 42,000 strong from the captivity of Babylon. Their first concern was to build for themselves houses, or to rebuild dilapidated buildings to make them fit for habitation. This done, they lost no time in repairing as one man to Jerusalem to re-establish their ancient worship and to offer sacrifices to their God, to consecrate themselves and their all to Him again as in the days of old. Let us learn from the topic:

1. All things should be consecrated to God. This is certainly the teaching of Ez. iii, 1-7. The people observed all the feasts and offerings that God had consecrated or enjoined, each one typifying the consecration of something to God. They also gave of their money that the temple might be rebuilt and of their substance for the same purpose. All things should be consecrated to God. Entire consecration is the only acceptable sacrifice that can be made unto Him. Our bodies, our souls, our possessions, our time, our talents, God requires and expects them all of us.

2. The reasonableness of entire consecration. It is reasonable because we ourselves and all that we have belong to God, and in requiring them of us He asks only what is His own. Justice gives to all their own. It is the doctrine of the Bible throughout that all things belong to God. This is applied to ourselves. "Ye are not your own," says Paul to the Corinthians, "for ye are bought with a price. Therefore glorify God in your body and your spirit, which are God's." Our money and our possessions are God's. "The gold is mine, the silver is mine, saith the Lord." "The earth is the Lord's, and the fullness thereof." Talents and abilities and positions belong to God, for He gave them to us. It is He that maketh one an apostle, another a prophet, another a pastor or an evangelist. It is He also that exalteth men to positions of honor and influence. All these things are God's. We are simply His stewards, holding them in trust. To consecrate them entirely to Him, therefore, is simply paying back to Him what belongs to Him, which all must admit to be just and reasonable.

3. Some characteristics of entire consecration. The sacrifices were voluntary. It was unrestrained, spontaneous and from the prompting of their inward piety. Thus we should consecrate all things to God willingly and voluntarily. It was also a continual and regular sacrifice. Entire consecration should be once for all. If we were perfect, it could be, but taking our imperfect natures into consideration it is necessary for us to rededicate and reconsecrate ourselves to God.

Entire consecration is the sum and substance of Christianity. It is for us to live and yet not live, but for Christ to live in us. When we can say that of ourselves, we are consecrated to God. Can we say it?

No Sunday Sessions.

The coming international Christian Endeavor convention will close on Monday, July 15, instead of Sunday, July 14. Instead of making Sunday, as heretofore, the great closing day, it has been decided to close Mechanics' hall and the two tents upon that day, and the convention as a convention will not be in session at all upon that Sabbath day.

The pulpits of Boston and suburbs will no doubt be occupied by visiting clergymen and laymen. The regular church services, the Sunday schools, the missions and the Endeavor prayer meetings will be the great rallying points for all visiting and resident delegates. Please note the change. Upon Monday night the closing meetings will be held with the great consecration meetings.

This we believe is a wise plan, and the various state and district Christian Endeavor conventions will very many of them adopt the plan which will be inaugurated for the first time at any international convention. The dates of the Boston convention are July 10 to 15, without sessions on Sunday, the 14th.—J. Willis Baer.

A Pleasant Half Hour.

An excellent amusement for a Christian Endeavor social, to fill up a spare half hour, is the following: Cut a square opening in a pasteboard and distribute to the members corks of different sizes. Provide with sharp knives those that are not already provided. Explain that the task before them is to cut the corks so that they will fit the square opening without measuring the opening judging entirely by the eye. The one whose cork fits the best should receive some slight prize.—Selected.

Christian Endeavor Notes.

The latest figures of enrollment of the English societies reach the glorious number 2,150.

There is now in Philadelphia an Episcopal Christian Endeavor society, the first formed in that denomination in the Quaker City.

New Hampshire has gained nine new societies since the last state convention.

Freeburg (Pa.) Young People's society sent a barrel of clothing to the western sufferers.

During a recent series of services in the Christian Endeavorer church at Malmo, Neb., 30 persons took a stand for Christ.

Seventeen members of South Australian societies are now endeavoring in foreign missionary lands.

Queensland union, Australia, has issued a booklet containing a plan for a year's systematic Bible reading.

THE EXPLOITS OF BRIGADIER GERARD.

How the Brigadier Held the King.

[Copyright, 1895, by Bacheller, Johnson & Bacheller]

CHAPTER V.

Finally he began to speak of what the English call sport, and he told such stories of the money which he had lost over which of two cocks could kill the other, or which of two men could strike the other the most in a fight for a prize, that I was filled with astonishment. He was ready to bet upon anything in the most wonderful manner, and when I chanced to see a shooting star he was anxious to bet that he would see more than me, twenty-five francs a star, and it was only when I explained that my purse was in the hands of the brigands that he would give over the idea.

Well, we chatted away in this very amiable fashion until the day began to break, when suddenly we heard a great volley of musketry from somewhere in the front of us. It was very rocky and broken ground, and I thought, although I could see nothing, that a general engagement had broken out. The Bart laughed at my idea, however, and explained that the sound came from the English camp, where every man emptied his piece each morning so as to make sure of having a dry priming.

"In another mile we shall be up with the outposts," said he.

I glanced around at this and I perceived that we had trotted along at so good a pace during the time that we were keeping up our pleasant chat that the dragoon with the lame horse was altogether out of sight. I looked on every side, but in the whole of that vast rocky valley there was no one save only the Bart and I—both of us armed, you understand, and both of us well mounted. I began to ask myself whether after all it was quite necessary that I should ride that mile which would bring me to the British outposts.

Now I wish to be very clear with you on this point, my friends, for I would not have you think that I was acting dishonorably or ungratefully to the man who had helped me away from the brigands. You must remember that of all duties the strongest is that which a commanding officer owes to his men. You must also bear in mind that war is a game which is played under fixed rules, and when these rules are broken one must at once claim the forfeit. If, for example, I had given a parole, then I should have been an infamous wretch had I dreamed of escaping. But no parole had been asked of me. Out of overconfidence and the chance of the lame horse dropping behind, the Bart had permitted me to get upon equal terms with him. Had it been I who had taken him I should have used him as courteously as he had me, but at the same time I should have respected his enterprise so far as to have deprived him of his sword, and seen that I had at least one guard besides myself. I reined up my horse and explained this to him, asking him at the same whether he saw any breach of honor in my leaving him.

He thought about it, and several times repeated that which the English say when they mean "Mon Dieu." "You would give me the slip, would you?" said he.

"If you can give no reason against it."

"The only reason that I can think of," said the Bart, "is that I should instantly cut your head off if you should attempt it."

"Two can play at that game, my dear Bart," said I.

"Then we'll see who can play it best," he cried, pulling out his sword.

I had drawn mine also, but I was quite determined not to hurt this admirable young man who had been my benefactor.

"Consider!" said I. "You say that I am your prisoner. I might with equal reason say that you are mine. We are alone here, and though I have no doubt that you are an excellent swordsman, you would hardly hope to hold your own against the best blade in the six light cavalry brigades."

His answer was a cut at my head. I parried and shore off half of his white plume. He thrust at my breast. I turned his point and cut away the other half of his cockade.

"Curse your monkey tricks!" he cried, as I wheeled my horse away from him.

"Why should you strike at me," said I. "You see that I will not strike back."

"That's all very well," said he. "But you've got to come along with me to the camp."

"I shall never see the camp," said I.

"I'll lay you nine to four you do," he cried, as he made at me, sword in hand.

But those words of his put something new into my head. Could we not decide the matter in some better way than by fighting? The Bart was placing me in such a position that I should have to hurt him, or he would certainly hurt me. I avoided his rush, though his sword point was within an inch of my neck.

I WAS DETERMINED NOT TO HURT THIS YOUNG MAN.

"I have a proposal," I cried. "We shall throw dice as to which is the prisoner of the other."

He smiled at this. It appealed to his love of sport.

"Where are your dice?" he cried.

"I have none."

"Nor I, but I have cards."

"Cards let it be," said I.

"And the game?"

"I leave it to you."

"Ecarte, then—the best of three."

I could not help smiling as I agreed, for I do not suppose that there were three men in France who were my masters at the game. I told the Bart as much as we dismounted. He smiled also as he listened.

"I was counted the best player at Watier's," said he. "With even luck you deserve to get off if you beat me."

So we tethered our two horses and sat down, one on either side of the great flat rock. The Bart took a pack of cards out of his tunic and I had only to see him shuffle them to convince me that I had no novice to deal with. We cut and the deal fell to him.

My faith, it was a stake worth playing for. He wished to add a hundred gold pieces a game, but what was money when the fate of Col. Etienne Gerard hung upon the cards? I felt as though all those who had reason to be interested in the game, my mother, my hussars, the Sixth corps d'armee, Ney, Messena, even the emperor himself, were forming a ring around us in that desolate valley. Heavens, what a blow to one and all of them should the cards go against me. But I was confident, for my ecarte play was as famous as my swordsmanship, and, save old

"I HAVE A PROPOSAL," I CRIED.

Bouvet, of the hussars, who won seventy-six out of one hundred and fifty games off me, I have always had the best of a series.

Thin Children.

The reason why they are thin is because their food does not nourish them. Probably they do not assimilate enough fat. Cod-liver Oil is the most easily assimilated of all fats, but in its natural state it upsets the stomach and deranges the digestion.

In Scott's Emulsion of Cod-liver Oil with Hypophosphites this difficulty is overcome. It is half-digested already and is very palatable. Children grow fat on it when all other food fails to nourish them.

SKUNK CATCHING IN MAINE.

It Is Quite Safe to Catch a Skunk if You Only Know How.

"While I was up in Maine last month looking after my stumpage," said a timber land investor, "I saw a hunter capture a den of skunks at one lick, and the ease and safety with which he did it rather astonished me. You'd naturally think, as I did before I saw it done, that it would be an unpleasant and odoriferous job, but it proved to be nothing of the sort. I was out in the woods one afternoon, not far from the open farming country, looking up an old blazed range line, when along came a man on snow shoes whom I recognized as Remick, a hunter and trapper living in the vicinity. We passed a few words together and I asked him what brought him out into the woods without a gun.

"'I'm after skunks,' he answered. 'There's a nest of 'em over the hill yonder that I found when I was fox hunting last week, and I've come to-day to git 'em.'

"Could I go along with him? Of course. There was nothing unpleasant to be apprehended if I merely looked on; but accidents would sometimes happen, and people at my hotel were to be considered, so I'd better not run the risk of taking an active part in the proceedings. And with that understanding we patted away in our snowshoes to find out if the skunks were at home.

"Their den was a hole under the roots of a birch tree, with many tracks about it in the snow, and it led down into darkness somewhere under a big root. Remick with his pocket knife cut and trimmed a slender pole, leaving at the smaller end some slightly projecting stumps of branches. He also cut a short club. He pushed the smaller end of the pole down into the burrow, twisted and turned it about and then withdrew it hand over hand. A noise of scratching was heard in the darkness, and a white bushy tail, its long hair twisted in the end of the pole, appeared at the surface, followed by the rest of a clawing, struggling skunk, who highly resented being dragged out in this manner, but couldn't in any way help himself. Lifting the pole instantly into the air so that the skunk hung by its tail, Remick dispatched the animal with a single blow of the club upon its head.

"'A skunk can't work his natural weppns agin ye as long as ye hold him by the tail,' the hunter explained as he sounded for another victim.

"Skunk after skunk was pulled out of the burrow and killed, and it seemed as if there was no limit to the number inside. When the last one finally was taken from the hole and the black and white animals stretched out on the snow to be counted they were found to be nine in number. The hunter tied them all by the neck to a stout cord and dragged them along over the snow behind him as we left the woods.

"'The skins 'll run forty cents apiece,' he said, cheerfully, 'and the lie is wuth as much more. It's powerful good for rheumatism or stiff jints, and I sell right to the village all I can git of it.'"

Chicago Millionaire's Eagle Eye.

Another story illustrative of the daily life of a Chicago millionaire may help to explain why some people have more money than others.

This millionaire invited a visitor from another city to meet him at a certain hour and accompany him to the stock yards, where he has large interests.

The millionaire rode up in a sidebar buggy somewhat the worse for mud and wear, drawn by a shaggy but active horse. He explained that before starting for the yards he would have to go to one of the large banks downtown, as he was on the board which regulated loans, and he had to pass on an application for a loan of $500,000.

They stopped in front of the bank, and the rich man hurried in and remained several minutes. He came out on a run and they started rattledy-bang for the stock yards and Packingtown.

When they arrived and were entering the packing house they saw an old man sorting out into barrels a heap of bones and fatty remnants. The bones were trimmed and put into one barrel and the flesh and fat into another barrel. The millionaire owner of the place walked over to the workman and began asking questions. Then he drew off his coat, rolled back his shirt sleeve to the shoulder and began rummaging among the bones. He found several which had not been properly stripped, and the workman received a scolding which he will remember all his life.

The stripping of those bones was just as important as the loaning of $500,000.—Chicago Record.

PARENTS, DON'T WORRY!

Paine's Celery Compound Strengthens Nervous Children

Nervous exhaustion in children is worrying a great many fathers and mothers these days.

While the hurry and bustle of modern life is bringing a constantly increasing strain upon grown men and women, there certainly comes to light the startling fact of a growing tendency toward nervousness among their children.

As these boys and girls, when older, will enter a life of nervous strain fully as exacting as that of today, it is no wonder that parents view with dismay these early signs of nervous weakness, and anxiously seek some means of making the young people strong and well again. The remedy is at hand in every city and town in America.

It is the remedy first prescribed by that greatest of all modern educators, Prof. Edward E. Phelps, M. D., LL. D., of Dartmouth college. It is Paine's celery compound, which Principal Camp of New Haven and President Cook of the National Teachers' Association have so recently recommended.

Countless parents today give their children Paine's celery compound and see them grow robust and vigorous day by day before their eyes till they are again restored to the perfect health that belongs to youth. Physicians everywhere advise the use of this greatest of blood purifiers and nerve foods.

One of the danger signals of nervous exhaustion among young people is the lack of desire for food and the capriciousness of appetite. When their overpressed nervous systems have been driven to the point of exhaustion, their faces grow pale and pinched, their spirits decline, their bodies lose perceptibly in weight and strength, they need more and more some active means of supplying the nerves and tissues with better nutrition, and the veins with better blood. When Paine's celery compound is given to one of these excitable, weak-nerved, perhaps scrofulous young persons, the mother is often amazed at the rapidity with which it restores the strength, builds up the worn nervous tissues, and replaces the languor of a depleted nervous system by the elasticity of youthful health.

Paine's celery compound makes people well—not only worn out, enfeebled men and women of mature age, but young persons whose slighter powers have been overtaxed by excitement or immoderate work without proper intervals for rest and repair.

Paine's celery compound has played a most important part in the lives of thousands of young people in every section of this country. Many whose nervous systems had been so stimulated as to unfit them utterly for study, it has made vigorous and strong enough to ably bear the burden of coming years. It has enabled them to grow up vigorous men and women, capable of doing the part of active, strong men and women in the world. Mr. James B. Wetzel, writing from his home in New Berlin, Penn., says:

"Allow me to speak a few words in praise of Paine's celery compound. My younger sister, whose picture I send you, was subject to nervous attacks, and, we thought, to heart trouble. We tried numerous medicines for her ailments, but without much avail. Last winter she had a severe attack of nervous trouble with her eyes, and we gave her Paine's celery compound and she improved wonderfully upon it, and she has been well ever since. If these few words of unsolicited testimony can be of any benefit please use them as my unbiased and unprejudiced opinion."

ARBOR DAY IN NEW JERSEY.

Fourteen Counties Adopt John Terhune's Plan of Celebration.

Arbor Day in New Jersey is celebrated with a vim that might well be emulated by other States. A very elaborate programme for this season's celebration, which takes place Friday, April 26, has been prepared by John Terhune, the School Superintendent for Bergen County, and has been adopted by the following counties also as their plan of the day: Atlantic, Camden, Gloucester, Hudson, Hunterdon, Mercer, Middlesex, Monmouth, Passaic, Salem, Somerset, Union, and Warren.

The morning is to be devoted to the planting of trees, vines, flowers, shrubs, and the afternoon to visiting the woods and fields for instruction, with notebooks to make record of the plants and trees discovered, for future consultation. In the evening literary exercises will be the order.

It has been suggested that nut trees should be planted, since New Jersey is in no special need of timber, and nut trees are fully as valuable for shade, shelter and ornament as ordinary forest trees, besides being remunerative.

The New Game Law.

The five game bills which the Fish and Game Commission wanted passed by the Legislature have all become laws, but two of them had to be radically amended to get them through. The bill consolidating all the game laws on the statute books, in relation to the hunting and fishing season, has been the most amended. A new section has been added which divides the State into two game districts to be known as the northern and southern districts. The northern district is to comprise the counties of Sussex, Warren, Hunterdon, Somerset, Morris, Passaic, Bergen, Hudson, Essex, Union, Middlesex and Mercer; the southern district comprises all the other counties.

It is made unlawful to kill hare, rabbit, quail, pheasant, gray, black, or fox squirrel, or woodcock in the northern district, except between October 25 and December 10 inclusive. In the southern district the open season for this game is between November 15 and January 1. The open season for gray snipe is made during the months of March and April, and between August 31 and December 15, and for reed birds, or marsh hens, between August 25 and December 15 inclusive. The season for grass or upland plover or doves is between November 1 and December 15.

There were no changes made in the bill from the original one in relation to the fishing season, except that pike and perch are stricken from the section relating to pickerel, for which the open season is from February 20 to May 1.

The greatest trouble was with Assembly bill 242, which changes the manner of appointing game wardens. The original bill provided that twenty of these wardens should be appointed by the fish and game commissioners, but the number has been increased to twenty-five. Otherwise the bill has not been changed. These wardens shall hold office for a year and shall be paid $50 a month. A fish and game protector is selected from the wardens, who shall receive $100 a month.

One of the bills introduced limits the time for fishing in tide waters of the State with net, fyke, seine, etc., from Dec. 10 to June 10. It stopped pound fishing along the shore. This bill was never reported by the committee. Another of the bills which passed prohibits fishing with fyke nets or similar nets above Trenton Falls in the Delaware, under penalty of $100 fine or six-months imprisonment.

Dunellen Threatens Plainfield.

(From The Dunellen Call.)

The Mayor and Councilmen of Plainfield might just as well be informed that there are some people in this borough who know how long it would take the courts to settle the sewage-disposal question as well as they, and although it would cost us some hard cash, we believe that we voice the sentiment of our people when we say that if any attempt is made to dump the sewage near us we will fight it to the bitter end, and you can make up your mind that the plant will be half rotten before Plainfield will be able to use it.

It is only a few days since Drs. Mitchell and Hunt, of the State Board of Health, were driven over these grounds by the president of our borough and Dr. Mitchell in expressing himself said, "that it would be very unwise to establish a system of sewage in so thickly populated a community".

Take your sewage to tide-water, gentleman, we want none of it.

Marvelous Results.

From a letter written by Rev. J. Gunderman, of Dismondale, Mich., we are permitted to make this extract: "I have no hesitation in recommending Dr. King's New Discovery, as the results were almost marvelous in the case of my wife. While I was pastor of the Baptist Church at Rives Junction she was brought down by pneumonia succeeding la grippe. Terrible paroxysms of coughing would last hours with little interruption and it seemed as if she could not survive them. A friend recommended Dr. King's New Discovery it was quick in its work and highly satisfactory in results. Sold by L. W. Randolph druggist. Regular size 50c and $1; our price 45c and 90c

IN MEMORIAM.

Mrs. Levi Darby.

Of Mrs. Frances M. Darby her late pastor, Rev. Dr. Parks of Scotch Plains, truly said at her funeral, "She was a woman to be depended on in the house of the Lord".

Fifty years of her nearly seventy years had been spent as an earnest, professing Christian. Great energy had characterized her walk in all departments of life. The qualities that distinguished this noble woman are best expressed by the single word brave.

Her illness, while on a visit to her daughter, was brief, and she died, as her bereaved husband pathetically put it, "away from home".

Two years ago they had celebrated their golden wedding. She had really been growing old, but, who knew it! Without a gray hair in the luxuriant brown masses that lay upon her forehead, with her own unabated energy, as she drew the reins over her carriage horse, "airing" merry loads of her loving grandchildren, she seemed only in the busy ranks of the middle aged. But time, the ruthless one, had been making inroads upon her fine constitution, and last Sabbath, in the glorious sunshine, back to the fine old family residence, near Fanwood, from distant homes, from business marts, from college halls, flocked children and grandchildren, along with many old neighbors and friends, to pay their last tribute of love and respect to her memory.

She had known sorrow. A son, her eldest, in the prime of useful manhood, a lovely daughter of twenty-two, and three younger sons, had gone before her.

The family present were her venerable husband, Levi Darby; their children, Mrs Aaron Darby, Messrs. John L. and Douglass Darby, Mrs. Albert Lambert, with their respective families; also her only sister, Mrs. John Lambert of Willow Grove.

Thank God for these perennial ones, who some day are not here because He has taken them. They seem to set the closing steps of life to stately music, and we move on the braver because they have gone before.

Plainfield Women Among Its Leaders.

Rev. Arthur Brooks, D. D., rector of the Church of the Incarnation, New York, has been elected a member of the Board of Trustees of the Gould Memorial Home. This well-known home is for orphan and and half-orphan children in Italy. It was founded in 1871 by the late Mrs. Emily Bliss Gould of New York, and the property in Rome was given by her husband, the late Dr. James B. Gould, for many years physician to the American Embassy at Rome.

The institution is supported by contributions from friends and visitors in Rome, and from friends in America. The property consists of a large building with garden, valued at about $40,000, and held in trust by a Board of Trustees, incorporated under the laws of New York. The trustees, well-known in New York and Boston), are: John Sinclair, Charles E Whitehead, A G Agnew, A D Juilliard, W B Barnes, Rev Arthur Brooks, D D, and Rev E G Porter of Boston.

The Hon. Wayne McVeagh, United States Minister at Rome, is interested in this Home, and Mrs. McVeagh recently presided at a social function given for its benefit. Miss Noble Jones, sister of the U. S. Consul-General at Rome, is Secretary of the Ladies Visiting Committee in that city.

Being an evangelical, non-sectarian institution, it merits special co-operation and support on the part of all who are charitably inclined.

The first directress of the New York Association is Mrs. C. R. Agnew, Palisades, N. Y.; secretary—Mrs. A. B. Smith, 66 West Thirty-eighth street, New York; treasurer—Miss L. Boorman, Plainfield.

The Boston Association in aid of the Gould Memorial Home will hold an annual meeting at Trinity Chapel, Boston, April 8. On this occasion Mrs. Florence Howe Hall of Plainfield will represent her sister, Mrs. Maud Howe Elliott, president of the Boston Association, who is now in Rome.

The Truth of a Rumor.

A reporter of The Daily Press asked Garret Q. Packer this morning what truth there was in the rumor that he was planning to take the entire first floor of an elegant new brick building to be erected by ex-Judge W. R. Codington on his recently purchased property at Park avenue and Second street, diagonally opposite Mr. Packer's present location. Mr. Packer said he had not adopted any such plan, though he was considering the advisability of getting quarters where he could have all his business on the ground floor. His present building he felt to be admirably adapted for his business, except that there was perhaps too much upstairs work about it.

An Argument.

Two fiery lawyers were wrangling in hot dispute.

(1) "I'll wager you don't know the first lines of Cicero's oration for the poet Achaias."

(2) "Don't I!"

(1) "Let's hear it then."

(2) "Give me liberty or give me death!"

See? Well! Well!

Dunellen Assumes Importance.

(From The Elizabeth Journal.)

Dunellen, just west of Plainfield, but in Middlesex County, held an election yesterday, the first since it was incorporated as a borough. And it went Republican, electing a Republican freeholder and changing the complexion of the Middlesex County board. It may be that this little borough election will ultimately open up and throw a vast deal of light upon the doings of the Middlesex board for some time past.

More Interest in the Riding Academy.

There was a larger attendance of both riders and spectators at the regular weekly lesson in the riding academy last night than has been the case in several weeks. Our better halves say they could not keep house without Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. It is used in more than half the homes in Leeds, Sims Bros., Leeds, Iowa. This shows the esteem in which that remedy is held where it has been sold for years and is well known. AT REST.

Mrs. Elizabeth VanZandt.

The funeral services of the late Mrs. Elizabeth VarZandt were held from the home of her daughter, Mrs. M. M. Dunham, Arlington avenue, this morning at 11:30. The gathering of friends and relatives who had known and loved the decedent so well were present.

Her pastor, Rev. Cornelius Schenck read appropriate Scripture selections, after which he made a few remarks which were based on the theme "Enoch walked with God". He likened the disciple of old to the one who had just passed away, for she too walked with God.

Rev. Dr. W. R. Richards followed with remarks which were in harmony with the text "What's that to thee? Follow thou Me". The words spoken brought consolation and comfort to those so dear to the departed. A very beautiful wreath of roses with the words "Our Mother" rested sweetly on the casket. The body was taken to Somerville accompanied by the relatives on the 2:09 train this afternoon, where interment will be made.

After remarks had been made by several Plainfield Pythians, the lodge meeting closed, and the women served refreshments. During the dancing which followed several recitations and songs were rendered by "Pop" Jones, Asa Pope, Louis DeCamp, Charles Foster and Mr Shultz. The party returned at 1 this morning.

Fraternal Visit.

A large number of the members of Scotch Plains Council, J. O. U. A. M., came to Plainfield last evening as guests of Franklin Council, No. 41, J. O. U. A. M., and the meeting was a very interesting one.

Two candidates were initiated in Franklin, and the work was most pleasing in view of the fact that the regular team was present to do the initiatory. The visitors were delighted with their trip, and expressed a desire to exchange the fraternal greeting at an early date.

The Grand Orient was exemplified on several candidates at the close of the regular business.

UNCLE PETER'S WILL.

Caveat Filed Against It by His Niece.

Ann Dickinson, niece of the late Uncle Peter Wooden, has filed a caveat against the will of testator, and the matter will soon come before the Union County Courts.

It is understood that if the effort to break this will is successful, a previously executed will will be presented for probate.

Undue influence is alleged, as ground for breaking the will.

His First Reading.

A fair-sized audience greeted Charles F. Underhill, the reader, at his first recital given in the Casino last evening. The entertainment was the first of a series of three given under the auspices of the Young Daughters of the King. The reading last night was from "A Midsummer-Night's Dream", and Mr. Underhill proved himself an elocutionist of rare charm and merit.

The stage was pretty set, and decorated with palms and vines. The organ music that accompanied the reading was not of the best, as the instrument was inadequate to rendering the Mendelssohn selections.

In the parts of the play in which the characters Pyramus and Thisbe figured, Mr. Underhill was particularly successful. The "Hard-handed Men of Athens" and the voice of "Bottom" showed great artistic discretion. The audience was appreciative.

Mr. Underhill is not, as many supposed, simply a reader. Without a text-book, he takes the parts of the varied characters with great skill, adapting his voice marvelously and changing his facial expression with great versatility. The compass and melody of his voice make all that he recites interesting, but in his representation of the humorous his success is phenomenal. The assigning of the characters in the play of Pyramus and Thisbe, the rehearsal and the performance of the tragedy by "hard-handed men—that never labored in their minds till now", were so cleverly done by Mr. Underhill that the fun of the play was a revelation to many in the audience. Several persons who had seen the drama acted, with all the accessories of superb stage-setting, said they had never realized that the play was so exceedingly funny as Mr. Underhill made it appear last evening.

For the sake of the organist, Herrmann Rannefeld, who accompanied Mr. Underhill with Mendelssohn music, we are sorry that he had not a pipe organ at his command, for the execution on the small, portable instrument showed the performer's ability to interpret many phases of emotion.

Mr. Underhill will give another recital April 22, from David Copperfield, when, we are sure, all who heard him last evening will desire to hear him again, and many who were not present will avail themselves of the opportunity to help the King's Daughters and please themselves.

Birthday Party.

Miss Alice, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Sylvester Sharkey of East Second and Richmond streets, celebrated her eighth birthday yesterday, by inviting a few of her friends to spend the afternoon from 2 until 6 with her. The time was passed pleasantly and no doubt too quickly by the young folks in various ways, including the playing of games, etc., until 5, when all sat down to a well-laden table, in the centre of which was a large birthday cake surmounted by eight candles, denoting the age of Miss Sharkey. All did justice to the good things spread before them, and in due time the children left for their respective homes, wishing the little hostess many happy returns of the day.

Among those present were the Misses Alice Sharkey, Irene Hope, Edna Ryan, Margaret Kenney, Margie DeCourcy and Marion Blimm; and Masters Walter Sharkey, Leo DeCourcy, Don Bechtel and Chester Allen.

To Fight the Ordinance.

An effort will be made by representatives of the Board of Trade to defeat the proposed new building ordinance on the ground that it will add to the expense of building. Advocates of the measure claim the additional safeguards will more than repay the extra expenses.

THE REVOLT IN CUBA

A Party of Filibusters Land on the Island.

They Killed the Steamer's Captain Because He Refused To Land Them Where They Wished To Be Landed—Five Exiled Leaders Succeed in Getting Back.

Madrid, April 5.—A despatch from Havana says that a steamer with a filibustering party of twenty-two men aboard of her went ashore early in the week at Duaba, near the eastern extremity of the island. The party was landed. From two of the steamer's sailors who were captured the Spaniards learned that Maceo, Crombet and Valdes were with the insurgent expedition, and that the insurgents had killed the steamer's captain for refusing to land them where they wished to be landed.

Fifty regular soldiers attacked the party, wounded several of the insurgents and captured one, after having suffered a loss of nine wounded. The five first named were distinguished military leaders of the last revolution, and three of them have been exiles ever since."

Patrols Aided in the Landing.

The explanation given by the Spanish government of the conduct of her cruiser in firing on the Allianca is that General Maceo, who had just landed with a party, was on board. The Cuban leaders asserted that the patrols made a demonstration at Puerto del Padre for the purpose of attracting Spanish troops so that the landing of the party might be successful.

Reject Terms of Peace.

Senor Andrew, editor of La Discussion, has been imprisoned by the Spanish government for printing information favorable to the patriots. La Lucha and other papers received by last night's steamer admits that Gen. Guillermon is not dead and several other things which the government at first denounced as untrue. The same authorities state that overtures made to Miro and other insurgent leaders to accept the terms of peace offered by the government have been stoutly rejected.

London, April 5.—The case of Countess Russell for a restitution of her conjugal rights was commenced yesterday before Baron Pollock. Sir Henry James, formerly attorney-general, for Earl Russell contended that the petition was not a bona fide one, and that the countess was actuated by a desire to secure money. He said that it was inconceivable that a wife who had brought such charges against her husband could wish to be restored to him now. The Russell divorce case caused a scandal at the end of 1891. Countess Russell petitioned for the dissolution of her marriage on accusations of extraordinary cruelty, and on charges so odious that they could only be briefly outlined in print. But her case broke down and a verdict was given against her.

IN WESTERN TURKEY

Smyrna May Become One of Our Naval Stations.

Considered the Most Important Point for the Defense of American Interests in That Part of the Mediterranean—The San Francisco Ordered There This Week.

Washington, April 5.—Last year the United States steamer Chicago, Admiral Erben commanding, was in Smyrna, Western Turkey, and after conference with American residents there, the admiral agreed to report to the navy department in favor of making Smyrna a naval station for the Mediterranean squadron. Representatives of the American board of commissioners for foreign missions have joined in the appeal, because they regard Smyrna as the most important point for such a defender of American interests in that part of the Mediterranean.

American Flag Seldom Seen There.

Constantinople cannot be approached by such vessels without special permit, and a permit cannot be secured easily. Next to the capital, the commercial interests of Smyrna are vastly in advance of any other port in Turkey. British, French, Russian, German and Italian gunboats visit Smyrna frequently, spending some times several weeks there, but the American flag has been very seldom seen.

San Francisco Ordered to Smyrna.

The influence of such visits cannot be questioned, for news of a gunboat in Smyrna harbor is carried at once far into the interior. At the present time, it is believed the representative of any of the Europen fleets would not cause such widespread satisfaction as one bearing the stars and stripes. Orders have been issued from the navy department directing the United States steamer San Francisco to sail from Palermo to Smyrna this week, and Secretary Gresham has notified Rev. Judson Smith, D. D., secretary of the American board in Boston.

Force Better Than Diplomacy.

Those interested in the matter maintain that the Turkish government is more impressed by a demonstration of force than by much wisely planned diplomacy and that there is but little which the government could do which would be better calculated to gratify the widespread interest and anxiety over American interests in Turkey than this bringing of some representative of the United States navy close to the view of the Turkish government, within reach of the capital of the empire.

TERRA COTTA WORKS GUARDED.

Seventy-five Deputy Sheriffs Watch the Workmen at Spa Springs, N. J.

New Brunswick, N. J., April 5.—Twenty-five deputy sheriffs more have been sent by Sheriff Serviss to the works of the Staten Island Terra Cotta & Lumber company, at Spa Springs, near Woodbridge, to protect the property of the company. There was a strike at the works because the men did not get their pay. They had a promise of their money yesterday, but did not get any of it. They hung about the works and threatened to commit violence unless they got the money. There are now seventy-five deputy sheriffs guarding the property of the company.

HARRISON A CANDIDATE.

Not an Active One, Perhaps, But Certainly in a Receptive Sense.

Chicago, April 5.—General J. S. Clarkson, who is in Chicago, states positively that ex-President Harrison is a candidate for the presidency. "General Harrison," he said, "is not an active candidate, perhaps, but he certainly is a receptive candidate. Indeed, he is, I think, one of the most prominent, if not the most presidential candidate now before the public."

YOUNG LADIES' TROUBLE.

FACTS MADE KNOWN TO FRIENDS

Lady Stenographers, Typewriters, and all Working Girls Interested.

[SPECIAL TO OUR LADY READERS.]

This class of women are more or less afflicted with illness brought on by constant application in one position. Therefore all will be interested in the candid expression of this bright young lady of Denver, Col., who writes Mrs. Pinkham as follows:—

"This is the first opportunity I have found to write and thank you for the good your Compound has done me. I feel better than I have for years. It seems a seven days' wonder to my friends. Where I used to be pitied, everything is the opposite, and there is not a day but what some one wants to know what I have done to work such a wonder.

"Before taking the Compound I had constant headaches; was constipated; bloated; eyes weak, with watery whites; bearing down pains; pains in the small of my back and right side; took cold very easily, which always caused intense pain in ovaries. I did not want to go anywhere or see any one.

"I was called cross, but I could not help it, feeling as I did. I could not lift anything or do any hard work without suffering for days afterward. Menstruation lasted from eight to ten days, the first two or three days being in almost constant pain, day and night.

"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has made a new girl of me; am now well, happy, and strong." Yours truly, A STENOGRAPHER, Denver, Col.

VENEZUELA FOR WAR

Will Not Suffer Dishonor at Great Britain's Hands.

Her People Desperate—They Would Rather See Her Cities Laid in Ashes Than To Pass Into the Practical Control of a Foreign Power—They Realize Their Weakness.

Washington, April 5.—It is stated by persons in a position to speak with authority that as soon as Venezuela is convinced Great Britain has finally declined to arbitrate or settle the boundary dispute, as suggested by the United States, through Ambassador Bayard, the southern republic will regretfully but resolutely resort to what she regards as her only recourse—a resort to force.

Realize Their Weakness.

Venezuela fully recognizes the great military strength of Great Britain against their own weakness, but it is declared that her people are ready to see their homes and their cities desolated and laid in ashes rather than submit to what they regard as national dishonor. It is said that the contention with Great Britain is not so much one of territory as of the sentiment and honor involved.

Would Rather Lose All.

So firmly impressed have the people become with this that the opinion is expressed that they would rather see their country go out of existence than pass into the practical control of a foreign power.

FLOATING OCEAN THEATRE.

A Novel Craft Launched at Boston by an Amusement Company.

Boston, April 5.—There was a novel kind of ship launch at East Boston yesterday afternoon, the launching of the float which will carry the theatre of the Floating Palace Amusement company. This is the very latest thing in theatres, and Manager Lackey, who has the affair in charge, is confident that it will be a success. It is certainly unique, as the only things which approach it are the London music halls, which are moved along the docks, or the old flatboat theatres of the Mississippi river. The theatre will be anchored off the Marine pier, south Boston, for part of the summer season, and will also go to Bar Harbor, Coney Island and other summer resorts. In the winter it may go south.

ALTERATION FOR THE CHICAGO.

It Will Take Two Years To Make the Changes Recommended.

Washington, April 5.—The inspection board has recommended a number of changes in the cruiser Chicago, among which is the doing away with her sail power and 6-inch guns. In place of the sail masts, military masts are recommended, and in place of the 6-inch guns a 5-inch rapid fire battery is proposed. It is estimated that it will require two years to put the Chicago in condition for service.

WILDE LIBEL SUIT.

The Case for the Marquis of Queensberry Opened This Morning.

London, April 5.—The case for the plaintiff in the suit of Oscar Wilde against the Marquis of Queensberry for criminal libel was finished last evening and the case for the defense opened this morning. Wilde was greatly confused under the final cross-examination. Most of the newspapers are printing the testimony in the suit almost verbatim, but character of the testimony is such that the St. James' Gazette says: "The English public is at the present moment involved in one of those orgies of indecency permitted by the operation of open law courts and an enterprising press." The newspaper urges that all such cases should be heard in camera.

GIVEN UP AS LOST.

Believed That the Schooner Lee and Crew Have Gone Down.

Gloucester, Mass., April 5. — The schooner Mildred V. Lee, one of the staunchest vessels of the New England fishing fleet, with a crew of sixteen men, is now added to the already large number of Gloucester's lost fishermen. On the afternoon of January 30 she sailed from this port on a fresh halibut fishing trip to Grand Bank, since which time she nor her crew have not been heard from, and it is supposed she was lost in the great storm of February 8, as wreckage picked up in the vicinity of Sable island about that time has been identified as belonging to her.

OUR GOLD SAFE AT PRESENT.

The Rate of Foreign Sterling Exchange Too High for Export.

Washington, April 5.—The rate of foreign sterling exchange has reached 4.90, a point higher than for several years past. The point at which gold can be shipped at a profit is said to be around 4.87½ and 4.88. At this point millions of United States gold has gone abroad, but the Morgan-Belmont syndicate is said to have such a thorough control over the gold export market, that treasury officials entertain no fears of gold being withdrawn for shipment, at least for the present.

MARSHALL FIELD'S GIFT.

He Will Help To Clear the W. C. T. U. Temple of Its Debt.

Chicago, April 4.—A generous offer of Marshall Field to the Woman's Christian Temperance union is announced. Mr. Field promises $25,000, with the proviso that $275,000 more be raised by January 1, 1896. It is intended that this total sum be applied to the debt overhanging the Woman's temple. The building of the Woman's temple is the greatest financial enterprise in which a coterie of women have engaged.

FIRED ON THE JAPS

Chinese Would Not Recognize a Flag of Truce.

Gen. Nodzu Fails in an Attempt To Arrange Details with the Enemy at Hai Chang During the Period of the Armistice—His Messengers Wounded and Missing.

London, April 5.—A dispatch from Tokio to the Central News says: "General Noduz reports from Hai Chang that on April 1 he sent a Chinese messenger to the Chinese military front, notifying the commander of the armistice and requesting a meeting to arrange details. On April 2 he sent a Japanese messenger and a trumpeter, requesting an answer from the Chinese commander within twenty-four hours. On April 3, the messenger and trumpeter not having returned, Colonel Acki, fearing foul play, started himself with a white flag and a trumpeter toward the outposts. The Chinese outposts began firing, when Colonel Acki halted and signaled with his flag of truce. When he attempted to advance the Chinese renewed their firing, wounding the Japanese flagbearer, and Colonel Acki was obliged to return. General Nodzu asks whether the Chinese envoy has informed the government at Pekin of the armistice."

CHINESE DEAD UNBURIED.

Bodies Eaten by the Dogs on the Field of Tien-Chwang-Tai.

London, April 5.—A Central News dispatch from Shanghai says that the correspondent of the Shanghai Mercury writes under the date or March 28, stating that he had visited the battle-field of Tien-Chwang-Tai and found that the bodies of the Chinese dead had not been buried, but had been left as they fell, and that many of them had been devoured by dogs. The place was wholly deserted. The Japanese have established a civil administration at New-Chwang to make preparations to handle the customs revenue.

Japs Land at Makong Harbor.

A Central News dispatch from Tokio says that information has been received from the Pescadores to the effect that on March 29 the Japanese warship Matusima sounded the mouth of the Makong bay. No torpedoes were found, and the transports landed their troops and stores in Makong harbor. The Chinese soldiers imprisoned there were sent to the mainland in junks. The captured Chinese officers were retained. The guns in the forts were slightly damaged and are repairing. The inhabitants are resuming business, and appear to be easy to govern.

Reception to Machinists.

A reception to machinists was given in the Y. M. C. A. Building last evening, and was well attended. Those present were given an opportunity to inspect the building, after which they were invited to witness an exhibition in the gymnasium given by the class under the supervision of Physical Director McPhie.

A tug-of-war between the two teams which met the other night resulted in a second victory for Mr. McGee's team. Mr. Schaffer gave an interesting exhibition of Indian club swinging at the close.

The funeral services of the late Mrs. Jasper Cadmus were held this afternoon from Grace P. E. Church, Rev. Dr. Rodman officiating. There was a large attendance of friends and relatives.

—Robert Barnes is not sick with the scarlet fever as reported, but is simply suffering from a severe cold, and will be able to be out in a day or two.

THE FATHER OF THE DIME NOVEL.

Erastus F. Beadle Published Books That Were Cheap and Exciting, but Moral.

A man died almost unnoticed the other day in New York who was, in his prime, a revolutionist in the literary field. I refer to the publisher, Erastus F. Beadle, the father of the cheap novel. Those of us whose memory reaches back to the times before the civil war will recall the fact that the 25 and 50 cent novel was the rule in those days, and the cost of paper and printer's ink, which went up with everything else, soon accustomed the novel reader to the idea of paying even a dollar or more for his treat.

But through all the "Beadle Dime Novel" held its own. It was a little salmon covered duodecimo, rarely illustrated inside, but often with a startling picture underneath the title. In an informal chat with a visitor about ten years ago, Mr. Beadle told most entertainingly the story of his venture in publishing. The idea of the dime novel occurred to him, he said, in 1859, and he began to act upon it in 1860.

"The state of the book market then," he went on, "was peculiar. Everyone was publishing books with thick paper and wide margins—trying to see how little they could give their readers for a dollar or a dollar and a half. Publishers exchanged books and took back such as were not sold. Well, I took the other tack, and thought I would see how much I could give for 10 cents—cash sales, no credit. Everyone said the project would fail, but it didn't.

"We first published dime song books, cook books, etiquette books, etc., which we bound in a salmon colored cover. No 'yellow covered dimes' were ever sent out by me; the color was salmon. The yellow covered ones were imitations, and were a bad lot. Well, after a while I started the dime novel. Mrs. Ann S. Stephens was the author of the first one—'Madeska'—a prize story, published forty years ago in the Ladies' Companion. I paid her $250 for the right to reprint the story. We sold 10,000 copies right off, and then 20,000."

Mr. Beadle had an editor in his employ named Victor, who used to pass upon manuscripts, order special work and the like, just as the editor of a literary weekly or monthly would do it. He was as interested as his chief in recalling their joint undertaking.

"The authors who wrote for us," said he, "were notable persons in their way. We had, for instance, one book by a man who was once a member of the Ohio legislature, another by an ex-governor of the same State. He never wrote us a bad line. Edward S. Ellis—you know him?—wrote us our most popular novel. He was a Methodist, and he went to his minister to know whether he could write a dime novel. He was a school teacher in Trenton and was not 21 when he wrote his first 'dime' for which he got $85. That was 'Seth Jones.'"

"Yes, I remember," broke in Mr. Beadle, unable to restrain his enthusiasm, "we plastered the country with 'Who is Seth Jones?' and when the excitement ran high we answered the question with that picture you see on that cover—'I'm Seth Jones.' We sold 60,000 copies of that story right off."

"These novels," Mr. Victor continued, "introduced either historical or local characters. They followed right after Cooper's Tales, which suggested them. Mrs. A. M. Denison wrote historic fiction; Judge Jared Hall, of Ohio, wrote 'The Slave Sculptor,' a story of Mexico in Montezuma's time—good names. Then there was Clara Augusta; she was a Maine lady, and a clever writer. Ellis wrote exclusively for us, and we have paid him as high as $250 for a novel of 40,000 words.

"Why, we paid better, in proportion to the quantity of matter we accepted, than the Atlantic Monthly. Our stories were very popular, and our yellow covered rivals—bad books—began to spring up. What did we do then? Oh, we had to kill a few more Indians than we used to, but we held our own against them."—Kate Field's Washington.

—A chalk talk will be given in the Crescent Avenue Church tomorrow afternoon by Mrs. Ellen Blair of Nebraska.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh that Contain Mercury,

as mercury will surely destroy the sence of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is ten fold to the good you can derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally, and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co. Testimonials free.

THE BICYCLE IN THE ARMY.

Lieut. Steven's Conclusions as to the Military Value of the Wheel.

Two military tactics for the use of the bicycles have been written, one by Gen. Ordway for the militia of the District of Columbia and one by Lieut. May, of the Fifteenth Infantry, U. S. A.

The regular army has not experimented yet with the bicycle as a practical means of transportation for soldiers. The War Department itself has never recognized the existence of the bicycle, though in an unofficial way several army officers, at their own expense of time and trouble and cost of machine, have made experiments with highly satisfactory results.

Lieut. Stevens of the First Artillery, now stationed at Fort Hamilton, said to a New York Sun reporter recently:

"I have demonstrated that the bicycle is a practical means of transportation even over poor roads, and when these roads are covered with snow and water, and the rider is carrying the weight of a soldier's ordinary marching equipment. I have ridden some kind of wheel for 20 years, and from my experience I am convinced that small detachments of soldiers equipped with rifle, blanket, canteen and bread bag could be moved from 50 to 75 miles a day on bicycles.

"Some time ago I went to the agent of a wheel I was riding and got a new wheel with the purpose of riding it to destruction, as we say of guns which we fire to destruction in experimenting with them. That was a 30 pound wheel. I rode it between seven and eight thousand miles. I have ridden it over bad roads, such as those between Fort Hamilton and Brooklyn, for instance. I have ridden it through snow and water and mud, and have purposely given it rough, hard usage, because I wanted to see what it could stand. Well, I learned a great deal about the machine, but I did not learn how long it would take me to ride it to destruction, because there is nothing the matter with the machine to-day.

"I am now riding a wheel which weighs as I ride, 32 pounds, or 28 pounds stripped. Wheelmen will understand by that that I am riding what is known as a heavy wheel. I don't approve of the light wheel or racing machines for practical road work. They would not do in the service, but I believe that such wheels that I speak of could be used by sentries, dispatch bearers and advance guards, and an enormous amount of quick transportation got out of them with the expenditure of comparatively very little physical force."

A NEW POLITICIAN'S ROW.

Mayor Strong's Distinguished Neighbors in West 57th Street.

Since William L. Strong became Mayor of New York city, on Jan. 1, there is a new Politician's Row uptown in the 21st district. It is in West 57th street, in the block between Fifth and Sixth avenues which has Mr. Strong among its residents. He lives on the south side of the street five doors from the corner of Fifth avenue. No. 2 West 57th street is occupied by William C. Whitney, whose prominence in the politics of the city, State and nation certainly requires no word of explanation. At No. 4, next door, lives James A. Roosevelt, Park Commissioner; at 6, James S. Kennedy, one of the Mayor's confidential advisers; 10 is occupied by Francis W. Leggett and 12 by Mayor Strong. Park Commissioner Augustus D. Juilliard, resides at 16. Across the way at 1 is Cornelius Vanderbilt, a member of the Committee of Seventy; at 7 is James Talcott; at 17 is Samuel Thomas, one of the prominent Ohio men in town, former Treasurer of the Republican State Committee and one of the Mayor's closest advisers; at 25 is Edward V. Loew, ex-Comptroller; at 30 David L. Einstein.

In the same election district with the Mayor are Chauncey M. Depew, Simon Schaefer, Percival Kuehne, M. C. D. Borden, Noah Davis, Rudolph Lexow and William M. Fleiss of Hollywood fame.

Another of Dickens' Slips.

Dickens' inconsistencies just now seem to excite considerable interest. A reader of the Philadelphia Record contributes the following from Chapter VIII. of "Nicholas Nickleby:"

Before breakfast—"Here's a pretty go," said that gentleman, (Squeers;) "the pump's froze."

"Indeed!" said Nicholas, not much interested in the intelligence.

"Yes," replied Squeers. "You can't wash yourself this morning."

"Not wash myself?" exclaimed Nicholas.

"No; not a bit of it," rejoined Squeers, tartly. "So you must be content with giving yourself a dry polish till we break the ice in the well, and can get a bucketful out for the boys."

After breakfast, same morning—"Where's the second boy?"

"Please, sir, he's weeding the garden," replied a small voice.

"To be sure," said Squeers, by no means disconcerted. "So he is. B-o-t, bot; t-i-n—bottin; n-e-y, ney, bottiney. Noun, substantive; a knowledge of plants, he goes and knows 'em."

Sudden changes in the weather are by no means uncommon here, but we don't break ice in wells and weed gardens on the same morning.

—Tomorrow "only"—Saturday, April —gentlemen's 4-ply linen collars 6c each, at VanEmburgh & Son's.

ETHICAL CULTURE SOCIETY.

Something of the New Cult Which is Gaining Prominence.

The movement of ethical culture now so prominent in all sections of the United States and portions of Europe had its origin in New York city, where the first ethical society was founded in 1876. The attitude of the New York society has been from the first neither irreligious nor anti-religious.

In the opening address which Prof. Felix Adler delivered on May 15, 1876, the watchword which he suggested for the new movement was: "Diversity in the creed, unanimity in the deed." He also emphasized in those remarks that belief in any of the received doctrines of religion should not hinder any one from joining the new organization. Neither should a negative attitude toward the current religious teachings be a hindrance.

Those who aspire to become good men should be welcomed to the new fellowship, no matter what their opinions might be on questions of theology or philosophy, Prof. Adler stated at that time. All that was expected was a sincere interest in the moral improvement of the individual and of society, and a willingness to waive points of difference and to come into fundamental agreement with others animated by the same desire.

These views had been known by a number of Prof. Adler's friends for some years prior to the organization of the society. Prof. Adler was at that time Professor of Oriental Literature at the Cornell University, and when a number of friends of the cause of ethical culture were prepared to form a society he resigned from the Faculty of the university and entered the field in which he had long been desirous to labor. It was a labor of love for him from the beginning and still is such.

At first the new society was the target for much hostile criticism and even bitter persecution. Like all new movements it required time to be correctly appreciated, and in the beginning it was misinterpreted.

The fact that the Ethical Society did not affirm any religious belief was regarded as positive proof that its members and its leaders were at heart hostile to religion. But this was a mistake, and as time went on it was perceived to be such. The prejudice which the society at first excited has abated from year to year.

Some of those who were its most pronounced antagonists have become its well wishers and supporters. The change of attitude against the society is shown by the fact that the Legislature of the State of New York has conferred upon Prof. Adler legal authority to perform the marriage ceremony.

PAGES IN CONGRESS.

The Boys Have Light Duties and Receive Good Pay.

One of the best place under the Government—in salary at least—which a boy can fill is that of a page in either the Senate or House of Representatives at Washington. The salary is $75 a month, and during the early part of the Congressional sessions the page has very little work to do.

His duties do not begin until 11:30 o'clock and they generally end somewhere between 5 and 6 o'clock in the evening. From the fact that there is so little to do and so much to get—for a boy—the place is much sought for by fathers and mothers who have youngsters whom they wish to put to work.

A place as page is obtained through a Congressman, and it requires the signatures of the majority of a State delegation to get it for a boy. In the House of Representatives one page is appointed from each State, though in the Senate there's but twelve boys altogether.

C. S. Sherwood, of New York.

Two New York men who registered at the Great Northern yesterday afternoon will have occasion to remember for some time the strange coincidence of their meeting and of their trip. Strangers to each other they soon made an acquaintance on the train. Yesterday morning one asked the other his destination. "Chicago," the one addressed replied. The one who had asked the question was also coming here. When they arrived at the station it was agreed they should go to the Great Northern together. As they stepped up to the desk in the hotel office one of them took the pen and wrote the name "C. S. Sherwood, New York." Then he laid the pen on the counter and stepped aside for his friend to register. The latter glanced at the book, and, bowing slightly, thanked him.

"Will you register?" asked the clerk.

"My friend has saved me the trouble," the man replied.

"That's my name, not yours, that I have written," the first gentleman said.

"Well, that's queer," was the response, and the second man, taking the pen, wrote "C. S. Sherwood, New York."

"That's my name, too, and here is my card. I thought you were registering for me."—Chicago Tribune.

THE BEN DAVIS APPLE.

How a Man from Old Steuben Was Set Back When He Found It.

"Bet a hen you don't know what a Ben Davis apple is!" said a confident Steuben county man. "Bet two hens! We people here in York State think we know a heap, but I'll make it three hens that you can take in all the country between the Hudson and the lakes and you can't find a man, woman or child that knows what a Ben Davis apple is. Leaving out me, of course. And I never knew what a Ben Davis apple was myself until I went to Egypt. That's the only country they grow the Ben Davis in—Egypt, Illinois.

"Say, we use up a good deal o' wind talking about our apple orchards along the Hudson and out in western New York, as if there hadn't been any apples anywhere else since the crop Adam and Eve gathered, but I want to tell you that we ain't in it with Egypt. No, sir! Why, that part of Egypt known as Clay county has got more than 50,000 acres of apple orchard alone, and Wayne county has almost as many, with Richland and Marion counties crowding Wayne's heels pretty close. Was I set back when I went down into Egypt? Was I? Well, it takes something to set a man from old Stooben back, and Egypt had it. I don't mind telling you that I was set back. Clear back!

"You see I was traveling out that way swelled up with the feeling that I was from the garden spot of all creation, if there was any garden spot, and I felt sorry for folks I met on the way that they were so far from old Stooben and I s'pose I showed it. When I struck the prairies of Illinois a man who sat in front of me turned and said to me:

"'Right smart turn of farmin' land, stranger?'

"'Yes,' I said, almost inclined to tell the man I'd pay his fare if he'd go back with me and take a look at some real country, 'but there don't seem to be much else but farming land. Now, where I live we bud and blossom! We bloom! You don't have any fruit out this way! You seem to be only of the earth earthy! Where I live we are of the fruit fruity! Ill fares the land,' I said, 'to hastening ills a prey, where wealth accumulates from corn and hay! It used to be the caper,' I said, 'but it don't go now! Fruit! Fruit is what you want, and you ain't got any!'

"'Would apples come under that heading?' asked the man.

"'Would they?' said I. 'Would apples come under that heading? Well, they'd only stand first under it, that's all! Apples! Well, I should say so! There is no fruit on earth like apples! Red, green, yellow or streaky, what so luscious as apples? What so fragrant as apples? What so beautious as apples? And what can you get applejack from but apples? My friend, it'd be worth your while to go with me to old Stooben and gaze once on apples!'

"'I'm goin' down into Egypt, now, to see some,' said the man. 'Thar's a few down there.'

"I said I'd go, too, for I wanted to see what they called apples there. I found out. I hadn't got far into Egypt before I heaved a sigh for old Stooben. Apples? I tell you right now that I'd never seen apples before. It was in October and they were gathering the crop. You could go for miles and see nothing but apple orchards and apples. And when they told me that they didn't look on a man who only owned a ten acre orchard as any account in the business, I did't say a word about that four acre orchard of mine back on the hills of old Stooben.

"And there's where I got acquainted with the Ben Davis apple. It is big, and red, and solid, and pretty as a picture. But there's no more taste to it than a door knob, no more flavor than a chunk of clay, and no more smell than a piece of lead. And yet they raise more Ben Davises than any other kind and they've got as high as $9 a barrel for 'em!

"Sounds funny to a man who loves the truth, doesn't it? Does, for a fact. But it's straight. I'll tell you why. The Ben Davis ain't an eater. It's a cooker. And its crop never fails. And the Ben Davis never rots. Bruise any conventional apple and that settles it. The bruise turns to rot and the rot takes hold of all the rest of the apple. The Ben Davis doesn't put up with any such nonsense. Bruise it if you want to, but that bruise will simply dry up and that's the end of it. The rest of the apple will stay just as sound as ever. And the Ben Davis never freezes. Or if it should freeze it don't mind it. Freezing doesn't affect it in the least. These are all strong points of this freak apple, but there are others. It is just as solid after it is cooked as it was before. It never falls to pieces under cooking, whether whole, halved or quartered.

"Then, having no trace of flavor of its own, it readily takes any other flavor and becomes a novelty to the housewife and the fruit canner. Imagine having a big, whole, cooked apple placed before you, and when you taste it, finding that its flavor is that of the most luscious peach, or juicy pear, or apricot, or orange, or anything else the hostess has seen fit to make it! That's where this queer Ben Davis apple comes out strong and metaphorically knocks the socks out of all other apples on the Egypt apple belt. Chicago and the South and West are mad stuck on this apple and its genus and buy it at any price. It will keep sound from one picking season to the next.

"That is, if it grew in either Clay, Wayne, Richland or Marion county. This is another thing about that apple that ought to get it a star place in a dime museum. If it is grown off that belt of counties it objects to keeping any longer than the middle of January and frequently decays before the holidays. And it will freeze just the same as any other apple. Don't know why it is. Don't ask me. But that's the Ben Davis apple, and I'll bet a hen you never heard of it before!"

The Low Level of the Dim-seen.

That part of Brooklyn called Greenpoint presents a curious aspect on a bright morning as seen from Lexington avenue at Thirtieth or Thirty-first street. First comes a strip of dimpled, sunlit water, and then the dim mass of the city lying low, bathed in a faint, warm mist and showing bright broad flecks where the sunlight is reflected from the almost flat roofs of buildings near the water front. The effect is panoramic, and not till one realizes how low is the level of the dim-seen city compared with the observer's point of view.—N. Y. Sun.

FOLKS AND A HOME.

"Pears like George Henry can't git nothin' to do," said old Granny Barker, disconsolately. "Elizabeth Ann does all she kin, but she jest can't git away from the young ones to earn much. I 'low we'll all starve an' freeze this winter that's comin'."

A small, weazened boy of 12 years regarded his grandmother apprehensively. Could it be true? Must they starve? His wistful blue eyes searched her face, as if hoping to discover in it that she did not mean what she had said.

"When I was a gal things were different," granny went on, dolefully. "There was somethin' where I was raised for almost anybody to do. Yes, Jimmie, even a little feller like you could 'a' got somethin' to do in them days. But times is changed. I'm hungry 'most all the time for somethin' nourishin' an' good. I do git so tired of corn bread an' molasses, an' not 'nough o' that!"

Jimmie reached over and laid his hand sympathizingly on granny's. He, too, was dreadfully tired of corn bread and molasses, and not enough of that.

"Say, granny," he said, "tell me what a little feller like me could 'a' got to do in the days you was a-tellin' of."

"Do? Why, what I did mostly, when I was little, was pickin' things on the sheares."

"How'd you do that, granny?"

"Why, I jest picked whatever needed pickin', and folks gave me part o' what I picked for my pay. That's pickin' on the sheares."

"Did pa do that when he was little?"

"No. George Henry never could git anythin' to do. Nobody ever wanted him to do anything—I do' know why. He always was stout an' strong, an' used to spry 'round considerable when it come to play; but he never could git work to do."

At this moment George Henry, Jimmie's father, slouched in at the gateless gateway and flung himself into a rickety chair to wait for the dinner his wife had earned by odd jobs done here and there.

"'Pears like it's goin' to come winter early," said granny, when the family had assembled around the pone and the molasses pitcher. "I feel shivery a'ready."

"Jest my luck!" mumbled George Henry, with his mouth full. "Somethin's always ketchin' me in a snap," and he looked resignedly round upon his mother, his wife and his housefull of children.

Jimmie looked at his old granny, whom he loved dearly, and a manly resolve entered his heart not to be "caught in a snap" if he could help it. "Maybe times ain't so changed as granny thinks they are. I'm going to see, anyhow."

Four months before this morning George Henry and his family had drifted from no one knew where and taken possession of a miserable tumble down shanty which stood at the western edge of the town.

"Granny said things that needed picking," mused Jimmie, as he started out hardly knowing what direction to take, for the half fed and ill clad child had been too shy and tired to explore the neighborhood before. He turned his face to the east and trudged bravely along, repeating over and over to himself those words that were his only encouragement: "Things that need picking—things that need picking."

He had walked what seemed to him a long way when he suddenly halted.

"I'm going in here," I am, he said, doggedly.

Perhaps the air of thrift about the place prompted his resolution, or perhaps the unpretentious look that invited rather than repelled the unfortunate. With a hand that tried hard to be resolute he opened the gate, closed it carefully behind him and followed the graveled path around the house.

As he turned the corner the kitchen door was before him, but he hardly saw it, for there, close at hand, was the wood yard, with its scattered chips.

"Things that needed pickin," he whispered to himself, and he gently knocked on the door.

"Oh, it's you, is it?" exclaimed a kindly looking woman who answered the timid summons. "I wondered who 'twas making a noise about like a bird pecking." Then she looked curiously at the forlorn little boy.

Jimmie's courage rose at the friendly greeting; for how was he to know that "Oh, it's you, is it?" was an habitual expression in the mouth of Mrs. Homewood?

"Yes'm, it's me," he replied, gratefully. "Did you want your chips picked?"

"Why, yes, I do," was the answer. "Chips are mighty handy, especially when you want a quick fire, and I'm that lame with rhemmatism that I can't get up and down easy as I could once. Why? Did you want to pick 'em?"

"Yes'm, I want to pick 'em bad, 'cause we hain't got anything scarcely to burn, nor much to eat, an' granny's got the shivers."

"Lawful sakes!" exclaimed the astonished Mrs. Homewood. "Are you the family provider—a little fellow like you?"

"I do' know. We hain't got anything scarcely, an' I thought I'd try if I could't get something before winter."

"How many are there of you?"

"Well, there's granny an' pa' an' ma an' Joe an' Sam, them's twins, an' Em an' Pete an' Jule, them's twins, too, an' Tom an' 'Mandy an' me."

"Ah!" gasped Mrs. Homewood. "Are you the oldest?"

"No'm. 'Mandy, she's older'n me. I'm 12."

"What does your pa do for a living?" she asked, sternly, after gazing long and pitifully at the child.

"I do' know. Granny says 'pears like pa can't get anything to do."

"Why, he ain't sick, is he?

"No'm."

"Hum!" said Mrs. Homewood, impatiently. And she added to herself, "Shiftless, I'll be bound." Then aloud to Jimmie, "What do you want for picking 'em?"

"Some of the chips. I want to pick 'em on the sheares."

"Well, who ever heard the like! Picking chips on shares! But never you mind. You shall do it, an' you shall pick on the halves, too. Here's a basket. Now do you pick it full first for me, an' come in an' empty it in one of these barrels in the woodshed. Then do you pick it full for yourself an' empty it in this pusheart, an' you keep picking one for me an' one for you till the cart's full, an' then I'm going to let you take your share home in it. You'll be honest an' bring it back I know by the looks of you."

Jimmie smiled gratefully, and the impulsive Mrs. Homewood, whose heart always ran away with her judgment at at sight of a child in distress, hurried on: "Yes, I know you're thankful that, too. But where do you live?"

Jimmie told her.

"Why, that must be a mile and a half from here. Well, I must go in now and you get right to work."

"Times ain't changed!" thought Jimmie, exultingly, as he joyfully began his task. "I 'lowed maybe they hadn't. Pa never could get anything to do, granny said."

"He really looks tickled," commented Mrs. Homewood, who sat watching him from behind the curtain of the kitchen window. "A boy tickled at the chance of picking chips is a refreshing sight, or it would be if he didn't look half starved an' I didn't know his granny had the shivers. But there's something to spoil 'most everything, I declare."

She jumped up from her chair, hastily prepared a sandwich and took it out. "Here, eat this while you're working," she said.

Patiently Jimmie toiled, for any work could be nothing but toil to that strengthless little frame. The cart held easily ten bushels of chips. All the barrels in the shed were full when, in the dusk of the autumn day, a little boy, tired almost to exhaustion, pushed the heavy cart into the yard at "home."

His mother herself came out to meet him, heard the story of his first battle for fortune, and bestowing a sounding kiss upon him led him in triumph to the house.

"He's his mammy's pride, that he is," she said, as she seated him on an old box near his granny and thrust into his hand the piece of corn bread spread with sorghum that she had saved from the family appetite at dinner time. Then she hastened out, attended by 'Mandy and the rest of the children, to carry in the chips.

"Not one of them chips is to be wasted," she said.

Jimmie had been gone but a few minutes when Mr. Homewood came driving home from what he called his country farm. The place on which he lived, lying so close to the town, he called his town farm. It was quite small, containing only forty acres, while the country farm was 200 acres.

Mr. Homewood was a thrifty old man and the well filled chip barrels caught his eye as soon as he entered the gate.

"Well, wife," he said, as he went in to supper, "you must have been having your chip yard tidied up. Who did it?"

"I don't know who he was, but he was the honestest little fellow I ever saw. I just sat an' watched him, but he didn't know it for I kept out o' sight. An every time he picked the biggest and the best chips into my basket an' he heaped mine and skimped his own. He was picking on the halves. And work! He never stopped a minute. I wish we had him."

"Oh, pshaw, Almira! Just because we never had any children you're crazy about 'em. I s'pose he was just an ordinary little boy." He spoke with a twinkle in his eyes.

"I don't love children any better'n you do, Joshua. I've seen you petting 'em."

"Have you, Almira? I don't know but you have," was all he said, but he smiled kindly. And suddenly his wife was her usual placid self.

All through that night, which seemed very long to Jimmie, the responsibility of the push cart weighed upon him, even in his sleep. In many a short and horrible dream it came to complete destruction.

Mr. and Mrs. Homewood had but seated themselves at the breakfast table when he trundled it into the back yard.

"There he is, Joshua!" cried Mrs. Homewood. "I'm going to have him right in to eat his breakfast with us. He don't look as if he'd ever had even one good meal."

Under the kindly and approving glances of the childless couple Jimmie forgot his timidity and made an exceedingly good breakfast.

"Well, sir," then said Mr. Homewood, "were you wanting another job?"

"Oh, yes, sir," cried Jimmie, eagerly. "Have you got something else to pick on the shears?"

"Well, yes," responded Mr. Homewood, pushing his chair a little back and tilting it gently the better to get his hand in his trousers pockets. "Yes, I'm going to have my potatoes dug to-morrow, but I can't go halves on them, for potatoes ain't chips, you know. Chips are sort o' no 'count, but potatoes are worth somethin'. Fifty cents a bushel, they are this fall, an' if you were to pick a whole day I couldn't give you more than one bushel."

"Yes, sir," assented Jimmie in a low tone. Then growing bolder, "Could 'Mandy pick, too?"

"Well, I do' know," said Mr. Homewood, hesitating a little. But he glanced kindly into the small boy's anxious blue eyes.

"'Mandy, she said," went on Jimmie, nervously, "to be sure to get her a job, too, for she didn't want to be behind me. 'Mandy and I are chums—'Mandy and I and granny."

"I've my doubts about girls picking up potatoes," began Mr. Homewood, and then happened to see Mrs. Homewood was looking meaningly at him and nodding her head vigorously. "But then I s'pose girls can pick potatoes if they take the notion," he ended, for he liked to indulge his wife.

She looked pleased at his sudden change of opinion; so he smiled and said:

"Tell 'Mandy she can come, too."

Jimmie now seemed eager to be off. The promise of potatoes might make poor granny's dinner taste better.

"Joshua," said Mr. Homewood, "it's a little far for those children to go for their dinner—"

"So 'tis, so 'tis, Almira. Glad you thought of it." Then turning to Jimmie: "You mustn't think of going home noons. 'Twould take too much time off your picking," he said artfully. "And you needn't bring anything. Mrs. Homewood'll get you up a snack of something."

"It's a little far for 'em nights and mornings, too," observed Mrs. Homewood. "Nights they'll be awful tired, an' mornings they'll have to be up so much earlier than they would if they stayed right here."

"That's so," indulgently chuckled Mr. Homewood. "Do you s'pose you an' 'Mandy could come and stay here for a week?"

"Without going home?" asked Jimmie.

"Yes."

The little fellow looked thoughtful. "There'd be more pone an' molasses, an' more room round the stove if we did," he said at last.

"That's well said," cried Mrs. Homewood, heartily. "And seein' you ain't goin' home for a week, just take a bushel of potatoes with you in the pushcart an' you an' 'Mandy be on hand bright an' early to-morrow."

On hand they were, and 'Mandy proved to be—like Jimmie in looks and actions that Mrs. Homewood said:

"If one wasn't a boy an' t'other a girl we couldn't hardly tell 'em apart. Do you believe, Joshua, they can possibly get done picking in a week?"

Mr. Homewood looked into his wife's eyes.

"No, Almira, I don't," he answered. "I reckon it'll take two at the least calculation. There'll be long nooning and late callings in the mornings and early quitting in the evenings, an' I reckon it'll be all of two weeks."

"You're an awful good man," she sighed in relief.

"Am I, Almira, am I?" And he went laughing away to look after the children.

'Mandy and Jimmie did not at all resemble their father, George Henry, in disposition. That distinction was reserved for the other children who still surrounded the daily pone and molasses pitcher.

"'Pears I never did taste anything so good as these 'taters," remarked granny. "There's no tellin' what them children'll be bringing home next. Chips to burn an' 'taters to eat is a good deal for them to provide, I tell ye. Puts me in mind of the time when I was a gal, an' things were plenty."

Ann Elizabeth smiled. Praise of her children were sweet to her ears.

"Yes, they're doing pretty tolerable well," she admitted.

"Some folks have luck and some haven't," grumbled George Henry, scooping the mealy heart out of a baked potato. "Most anybody could bring home 'taters, if they knowed where to get 'em. I never had such luck."

Meanwhile, 'Mandy and Jimmie kept on doing their best in a sober way.

"This is like the times granny tells us when she was young," ventured Jimmy one evening, when he had become better acquainted.

"And how was that, sonny?" asked Mr. Homewood.

"Why, things were plenty then, and all they had to do in those days were to be willing to work. It was warm and clean an' there was plenty to eat, as they is at your house. Granny never had the shivers then."

"I've no patience with that father o' theirs, an' that's a fact," burst out Mrs. Homewood when the children had gone to their rooms. "What does he mean, I'd like to know?"

"Mean!" returned the husband. "Mean! Why, he don't mean anything, I guess."

It may have been that 'Mandy's and Jimmie's effort stimulated their mother to fresh exertions. At any rate she sought and found extra odd jobs which overtaxed her poorly nourished strength. She caught cold, fell sick of pneumonia and died the very day that 'Mandy and Jimmie returned home from their long season of potato picking.

Poor children! In Jimmie's heart was the memory of that evening when he had been led into the house by his mother in triumph. Her words: "He's his mammy's pride," were in his ears. He hungered for more of that dear praise, and now his mother was gone.

'Mandy had hoped to share with him that approval, and the two sat down in the corner and gazed, stunned and despairing at that cold, strange something on the bed that had been their mother.

The Homewoods were quick to come to the hut when they heard the news.

"Who's to take charge now, without it's poor old granny, I can't see," said Mrs. Homewood, looking around the cheerless place. "We'd best take Jimmie an' 'Mandy back with us for a spell till we see what's to be done."

And so, the funeral over, the sad little brother and sister went back with Mr. and Mrs. Homewood, while the others, all sharing George Henry's stolid submission to fate, sat down to see granny cook and fetch and carry for them.

Not for long, however. It was spring when the poor old woman dropped her heavy burden and was laid beside Ann Elizabeth.

The molasses pitcher was empty; there was no pone baked, no meal in the bag, and the food which the pitying neighbors had sent in day by day until granny was carried to her resting place, had all been eaten. George Henry shook his disconsolate head and shambled off to town.

"Something must be done," said the neighbors. "Homes must be found for those children. That man will let them starve."

George Henry thought homes for the children would be a good thing.

"A man that hain't got no women folks can't noways do for a passel o' children the way they had ought to be done for," he said. "I hain't had no luck sence I come here, but I 'low if I was wonst back where I was raised, I could git along somehow."

So the town promptly bought him a railway ticket to that desired spot. Mr. and Mrs. Homewood had taken 'Mandy and Jimmie who were sorely grieved for granny, out for a little visit to their country farm, and when they returned, two weeks later, the Barker family had vanished, as Mr. Homewood discovered on his first trip to the square.

"Poor little things! This word goes pretty rough with 'em. I can't bear to tell 'em," he said, after informing his wife.

But Jimmie and 'Mandy had to be told that evening in the cheerful kitchen, where the fire cracked merrily with the draft of the blustering March wind outside. Jimmie and 'Mandy clean and tidy with their cheerfulness somewhat restored, were moving about, but the old couple wore troubled faces.

"Come set in my lap, Jimmie," said Mrs. Homewood. "An' 'Mandy you go an' set on that stool close to Uncle Joshua."

The children obeyed. And sitting thus they heard in sympathetic tones what had befallen them. Jimmie was the first to speak.

"'Mandy an' I ain't anybody now," he said. "We ain't got any folks an' no home."

Then he hid his face on Mrs. Homewood's breast and began to sob: "I want my folks an' my home," he cried. "I want my folks an' my home!"

Then Mrs. Homewood looked beseechingly at her husband, and then said, "Joshua!"

And Mr. Homewood replied, as he tenderly stroked 'Mandy's hair, "Yes, Almira."

And the children were soon made to understand that once more they had folks and a home.—Youth's Companion.

THE NEW JOURNALISM.

Its Good and Bad Points Discussed by Women.

In a London club the other day a paper was read by a Miss Phillips, presumably a newspaper woman, on the "New Journalism."

The writer of the paper frankly admitted that the new journalism is considerably more readable than the old, but she thought there were occasions when it was better to be dull than to be readable at too great a cost. She blamed the new journalism for pandering to some of the lowest and most vulgar tastes of the public, and undeniably was able to support her indictment with evidence not to be lightly set aside.

The new journalistic passion for personalities was chiefly deplored. Everybody from royalty down to criminals, who filled the public eye from any cause, was insulted by remarks upon personal appearance, which were absolutely unjustifiable.

She had known of a lady who, when waiting at her friend's house for her hostess, took up a paper to read the comforting observation that she "had quite lost the beauty that was admired last season." A girl, on the eve of receiving a proposal, read that the gentleman concerned "had occasioned remark by sitting out a great many dances" with some one else. Consequently, when the offer was made, a misunderstanding ensued which threatened disastrous results.

Miss Phillips was equally severe upon those enterprising investigators who impersonated domestic servants, flower girls, and the more, fearing, too, that the vein was not yet exhausted. Although she scored the average editor who seemed to think that woman's sphere or her interest certainly was limited to clothes and cookery, she paid a tribute to the now happily less and less exceptionable editor who recognizes that there is a woman's side which deserves serious treatment to nearly all the great political and social questions of our age.

It was noticeable, according to the report, that few spoke with enthusiasm of the journalism that "dares to be dull," as the writer of the paper had expressed it. However, toward the close one or two persons were found to say that, although newspaper reading, which in the past was so tedious as to be accounted a virtue, had now become so amusing as to be reckoned a vice; it was, at all events, a vice that tended at some points toward virtue's side. For in all the journals of the present day there is much beautiful and brilliant writing, which is not perceived to be literary because it is not bound between book covers.

HUSBAND IS MASTER STILL.

Even if Nobody Says So Nowadays Except Occasionally a Judge in Court.

In the cross actions of Sigmont Simon, clothing merchant, and his wife, Jennie, for a separation on the ground of abandonment, a motion was made before Judge McAdam of the Supreme Court in New York City for counsel fee and alimony.

The Simons fell out last April over the discharge by Simon of the French maid, and each has offered to return to the other if an arrangement could be reached as to the relative rights of husband and wife over their affairs.

The wife wanted absolute charge of the household, with power to hire or discharge servants. The husband demanded to be recognized as master of the household and head of the family.

In reserving decision on the motion which turned on the question which one had abandoned the other Judge McAdam said:

"The wife should obey the reasonable demands of the husband. Under the old English law the husband's authority was supreme and he had a right to chastise his wife. The law is different now, but still the husband's reasonable demands must be obeyed." He reserved decision on the motion.—N. Y. Sun.

Some Ways of Photographers.

When the photographer handed the finished product to his customer he remarked: "Won't you please allow me to put your portrait in our showcase outside the door? It's really one of the prettiest pictures I ever saw, and it will help us in our business to have it seen."

"You think it good?" said the young woman, simpering.

"Splendid," was the reply. "A gentleman was in here this morning, one of our high toned leaders of society. He saw the photograph on the counter and was so struck by it that he offered me $5 for it; but of course I could not sell it. Then he offered me $5 to tell him who it was."

"He-he-he!" giggled the young thing. "Well, I suppose I'll have to let you put it in the showcase; only you don't think people will think I'm nervy, do you, to have so much publicity?"

"Oh, no, indeed. Some of our most prominent citizens would give their eyes to be in our showcase. I'm really very much obliged to you for your kind consent. But don't you think you'd like another dozen pictures?"

"Better make it two dozen more," said the young thing, "since they're so good. Here's the money."

A Serious Reflection.

She was of a somewhat haughty nature, and, being on a shopping expedition with a friend, happened to catch a glimpse of an acquaintance she did not wish to recognize.

"Let us go this way past the silk counter. I just saw some one I don't care to meet."

"Who is she?" asked her friend, who did not see any one near them.

"Oh, some horrid woman with a smirk on her face. Of course, I have only a bowing acquaintance with her, and although her face is so familiar I cannot remember her name."

They finished their shopping, and the two ladies found themselves at the same point where one of them had seen her disagreeable acquaintance.

"There she is again. Why, I do believe she's been there all the time," she said, pointing to the person in question.

"That woman? Goodness sakes, that's yourself you see in the mirror there."—The Amusing Journal.

Porter's Gallant Fight In the Essex.

March 28, 1814, the renowned war frigate Essex ended her long cruise under the American flag. With her consort, the Essex Junior, she lay at Valparaiso, blockaded by the Phœbe and Cherub, both armed with long guns. The Phœbe carried 73 and the Essex 46, chiefly carronades. The British crew was nearly double the American. The Essex lost her maintop mast in a squall, and seizing the moment of advantage the British captain placed both vessels under her stern out of reach of her carronades and opened fire. The captain of the Essex, David Porter, finally got three long guns at work through the stern ports and for half an hour gave the enemy a lively battle. Both British ships hauled off for repairs. The Essex herself had lost so much rigging she couldn't carry sail nor maneuver, but Porter determined to pay the Britons for their unwarranted attack in neutral waters. With only a flying jib he put the Essex near enough to the Phœbe to use his carronades in broadside. The British captain immediately hauled off out of reach of the carronades, and with long 18 pounders riddled the Essex, with fearful slaughter of her men. The water was still and the range accurate. At one gun of the Essex 15 men were killed, and three complete crews were used up fighting it. The carronades were soon disabled, the pits filled with wounded, and 58 dead lay around the deck. Porter at last saw that his only hope for escape was to reach shore, as the wind blew in that direction. He made for land and gave his men the choice of sticking by the ship or swimming ashore. The boats had all been destroyed in the battle. Although the vessel was afire below and the enemy's guns still raking her, most of the men preferred to stand by their captain, the only officer left on deck. Of those who jumped overboard 31 were drowned, some of them struck by the enemy's fire. The Essex was unable to reach shore. Throwing out an anchor, Porter swung his ship around and dealt the Phœbe a last broadside, but it was useless, and he gave orders to haul down the old flag.

Battle of the Barriers at Paris.

March 30, 1814, settled the fate of Napoleon's empire, proving that in war Paris is France. Won or lost, all goes with it. Marshal Marmont, with but 10,000 men to hold the barricades, awaited the coming of the emperor, who had been cut off while struggling to reach his capitol. The allies stormed the gates in overwhelming numbers. Marmont personally led out such columns as could be spared and seized the heights beyond the barriers, but the allies retook them with the bayonet. Beaten at one point, Marmont charged at another, using up all the power of his force in these brave but ineffectual sorties. The allies massed their troops at the weakest places, suspending the attacks elsewhere until the French concentrated, then charged all along the line. All hope of salvation for Marmont lay in the batteries, which for mere show to encourage the people had been manned with boys taken out of the polytechnic school, lads of 12 to 16 years. While strong men fought at the barriers, this youthful corps served the guns like heroes. The impetuous Russians and Germans, elated over their victories at the barriers, pressed through the streets in dense columns. Then the boy cannoneers, with the guns trained to sweep the squares and corners, opened fire and mowed down the assailants until the pavements were covered with the fallen. But it was useless carnage. Paris was lost, and Marmont yielded to the fates. Napoleon, belated, but hopeful, arrived only to find the nation clamoring for his downfall.

A Scion of "The Black Watch" Clan.

March 31, 1891, merits a bright mark in this century of massacres as a day when a British detachment got the best of an encounter with barbarians. On that day Lieutenant C. J. W. Grant, a descendant of the highland clan of "Black Watch" soldiers, caught in the Manipuri jungle with only 80 men, where it was fight and win or be butchered, stormed and carried Fort Thobal. While marching to the relief of the English residency at the capital of Manipuri he came to a river crossing covered by a fort on the opposite bank. The force of 80 braves was placed in three lines, the first two of 20 men each, firing in sections of ten each. While one section of the front line fired the other rushed forward 30 paces, dropped down and opened fire. At 100 yards from the fort Grant signaled the supports, 40 men in two sections, to move up on either flank. They did so, not halting at the firing line, but rushed 40 yards ahead, dropping and beginning to shoot. Then the first sections arose in a body and dashed forward to the bank, down into the stream, Grant at the head of all. The Manipuri crouched behind their walls, firing through loopholes until the assailants advanced with the cold steel. Grant with a handful, using the bayonet freely, pushed forward in the center, and the supports made a rush on the flanks. The Manipuri, dazed by the fury of the English, fled up the hillside. The works were a mile in length and had sheltered 800 savages, armed with muskets and Martini rifles. Grant held Fort Thobal seven days, besieged by thousands, and was preparing to cut his way through to the capital when a native messenger stole into camp, bringing peremptory orders from his superior to retreat.

The Charge That Won at Five Forks.

April 1 is the thirtieth anniversary of the battle credited with settling the fate of Petersburg and Richmond. Sheridan's army turned Lee's right at Five Forks. The key of the Confederate position was a slight angle or return in the intrenchment covering Five Forks crossroads. Sheridan deployed his cavalry in front of the intrenched line and sent Warren's corps to carry the return, which was in the forest and could not be located within many hundred rods. The first and second divisions of Warren, marching by the flank, passed it, and the third and last division, which was also the smallest, led by Romayne B. Ayers, following the other two, received a galling fire from the Confederates posted behind the angle. Ayers quickly faced his reserve brigade toward the blazing guns. It was led by Colonel Frederick Winthrop of the Fifth New York, a cousin of the hero of Big Bethel. The brigade was composed entirely of New Yorkers. They charged at double quick, with Winthrop at their head. The Confederates had placed their best guns and men in the angle as a forlorn hope. It was defended gallantly, but Winthrop's soldiers plunged though the heavy fire poured on them and carried the works. Winthrop fell mortally wounded, the last brigade commander killed in the Army of the Potomac. After the angle had been broken Warren's men marched down the Confederate line on the rear, leaving little for Sheridan's troops to do, except sweep up the fragments.

GEORGE L. KILMER.

Fell In the Last Ditch.

April 2 is the thirtieth anniversary of the fall of Petersburg. Everything gave way, but there were hitches in the proceedings of conquest, for some of the Confederates made good the boast to die in the last ditch. On an old abandoned line near the city limits stood an empty battery called Fort Gregg. It was one-quarter of a mile in advance of the main Confederate trenches, toward which the blue and gray were racing, and Lee's salvation for a day, even, depended upon his men getting there first. A wide awake southern brigadier saw that Fort Gregg stood in the way of Grant's columns and got two six pounders and 214 riflemen and cannoneers into the battery just as Gibbon's division of 5,000 men overran the field in front. The parapet of Gregg was so low that the guns were fired over the top, and the brave cannoneers fell in rows, like tenpins. The riflemen in the fort held their fire until the assailants got within 30 yards, and with their stinging shots repulsed five charges in succession. The surviving gunners took up rifles after using all the canister in their chests. When bullets ran short, the defenders hurled stones and brickbats over the walls at the daring assailants. Orders were renewed in the Union ranks to carry the fort at all hazards, but at the end of two hours' desperate work its colors were still flying. Finally Gibbon's men saw that an infantry breastwork joined on to the rear wall of the fort, making a bridge for scalers to enter. By this means the garrison, reduced to 80 unwounded men, was overpowered. When all was lost, a North Carolina boy named Atkinson, whose chief had planned the defense, seized the flag and dashed away over the parapet, followed for 500 yards by the bullets of the angry men, whom he had robbed of the grandest trophy a victory can give. There were 55 dead Confederates in the fort. Lane's, Thomas' and Harris' brigades furnished the infantry of this heroic garrison. The gunners belonged to the Washington artillery of New Orleans.

By A. CONAN DOYLE.

[Copyright, 1895, by Bacheller, Johnson & Bacheller]

CHAPTER VI.

The first game I won right off, though I must confess that the cards were with me, and that my adversary could have done no more. In the second I never played better and saved a trick by a finesse, but the Bart voled me once, marked the king, and ran out in the second hand. My faith, we were so excited that he laid his helmet down beside him, and I my busby.

"I'll lay my roan mare against your black horse," said he.

"Done," said I.

"Saddle, bridle and stirrups!" he cried.

"Done!" I shouted.

I had caught this spirit of sport from him. I would have laid my hussars against his dragoons, had they been ours to pledge.

And then began the game of games. Oh, he played, this Englishman; he played in a way that was worthy of such a stake. But I—my friends, I was superb! Of the five which I had to make to win I gained three on the first hand. The Bart bit his mustache and drummed his hands, while I already felt myself at the head of my dear little rascals. On the second I turned the king, but lost two tricks, and my score was four to his two. When I saw my next hand I could not but give a cry of delight. If I cannot gain my freedom on this, thought I, I deserve to remain forever in chains.

THE CARDS WERE WITH ME.

Give me the the cards, landlord, and I will lay them on the table for you. Here was my hand—knave and ace of clubs, queen and knave of diamonds and king of hearts. Clubs are trumps, mark you, and I had but one point between me and freedom. As you may think, I declined his proposal. He knew that it was the crisis, and he undid his tunic. I threw my dolman on ground. He led the ten of spades. I took it with my ace of trumps. One point in my favor. The correct play was to clear the trumps, and I led the knave. Down came the queen upon it, and the game was equal. He led the eight of spades, and I could only discard my ace of diamonds. Then came the seven of spades, and the hair fairly stood straight up on my head. We each threw down a king at the finale. He had won two points, and my beautiful hand had been mastered by his inferior one. I could have rolled on the ground as I thought of it. They used to play very good ecarte at Watier's in the year '10. I say it—I, Brigadier Gerard.

The last game was now for all. This next hand must settle it one way or the other. He undid his sash and I put away my sword belt. He was cool, this Englishman, and I tried to be also, but the perspiration would trickle into my eyes. The deal lay with him and I may confess to you, my friends, that my hand shook so that I could hardly pick my cards from the rock. But when I raised them what was the first thing that my eyes rested upon? It was the king, the king, the glorious king of trumps. My mouth was open to declare it when the words were frozen to my lips by the appearance of my comrade.

MY BEAUTIFUL HAND HAD BEEN MASTERED.

He held his cards in his hand, but his jaw had fallen and his eyes were staring over my shoulder with the most dreadful expression of consternation and surprise. I whisked round, and I myself was amazed at what I saw.

Three men were standing quite close to us—fifteen meters at the farthest. The middle one was of a good height, and yet not too tall—about the same height in fact that I am myself. He was clad in a dark uniform with a small cocked hat and some sort of white plume upon the side. But I had little thought for his dress. It was his face, his gaunt cheeks, his beak of a nose, his masterful blue eyes, his thin firm slit of a mouth which made one feel that this was a wonderful man, a man of a million. His brows were tied into a knot, and he cast such a glance at my poor Bart from under them that one by one the cards came fluttering down from his nerveless fingers. Of the two other men, one, who had a face as brown and as hard as though it had been carved out of old oak, wore a bright red coat, while the other, a fine portly man with bushy side whiskers, was in a blue jacket with gold facings. Some little distance behind three orderlies were holding as many horses, while an escort of lancers were waiting in the rear.

"Heh, Crawford, what the devil's this?" asked the thin man.

"D' you hear, sir," cried the man with the red coat. "Lord Wellington wants to know what this means."

My poor Bart broke into an account of all that had occurred, but that rock-face never softened for an instant.

"Pretty fine, 'pon my word, Gen. Crawford," he broke in. "The discipline of this force must be maintained, sir! Report yourself at headquarters as a prisoner."

It was dreadful to me to see the Bart mount his horse and ride off with hanging head. I could not endure it. I threw myself before this English general. I pleaded with him for my friend. I told him how I, Col. Gerard, would witness what a dashing young officer he was. Ah, my eloquence might have melted the hardest heart; I brought tears to my own eyes, but none to his. My voice broke and I could say no more.

"What weight do you put on your mules, sir, in the French service?" he asked. Yes, that was all this phlegmatic Englishman had to answer to these burning words of mine. That was his reply to what would have made a Frenchman weep upon my shoulder.

"What weight on a mule?" asked the man with the red coat.

"Two hundred and ten pounds," said I.

"Then you load them deucedly badly," said Lord Wellington. "Remove the prisoner to the rear."

His lancers closed in upon me, and I—I was driven mad, as I thought that the game had been in my hands and I ought at that moment to be a free man. I held the cards up in front of the general.

"REMOVE THE PRISONER TO THE REAR."

"See, my lord!" I cried, "I played for my freedom and I won, for, as you pecceive, I hold the king."

For the first time a slight smile softened his gaunt face.

"On the contrary," said he, as he mounted his horse, "it was I who won, for, as you perceive, my king holds you."

[THE END.]

Those who never read the advertisements in their newspapers miss more than they presume. Jonathan Kenison, of Bolan, Worth Co., who had been troubled with rheumatism in his back, arms and shoulders, read an item in his paper about how a prominent German citizen of Fort Madison had been cured. He procured the same medicine, and to use his own words: "It cured me right up." He also says: A neighbor and his wife were both sick in bed with rheumatism. Their boy was over to my house and said they were so bad that he had to do the cooking. I told him of Chamberlain's Pain Balm and how it had cured me, he procured a bottle of it and it cured them up in a week. 50 cent bottles for sale at Reynolde's Pharmacy, Park and North aves. T. S. Took a Tumble.

While Albert Smalley and son were driving along Somerset street yesterday afternoon, in a light road wagon, the kingbolt broke, and allowed the body of the vehicle to drop to the ground, with the result of pitching the occupants out and bruising their hands. The horse ran away with the front wheels and shafts, but was caught several blocks further up the street by Marshal Wilson. No damage was done other than the breaking of the bolt.

A Syrian Speaker.

The Woman's Foreign Missionary society of the Park Avenue Church met yesterday afternoon with Mrs. James Middledith, corner of Park avenue and East Ninth street, and listened to a very entertaining talk on Syria by Miss Ben Hadad, a native of that country. She was dressed in her native costume, and spoke in a remarkably distinct voice, telling of the peculiar habits of the Syrians, and of the missionary work that is being done among them.

DIVORCE FREAKS.

ODD LAWS IN ALL COUNTRIES FOR UNDOING THE TIES OF MARRIAGE.

Queer Burmese and Chinese Customs. Distinguished Romans Who Cast Off Their Wives. England Grants Fewest Divorces. Switzerland Most of All.

The question of divorce seems to be agitating pretty nearly every civilized country in the world just now.

From the history of divorce it appears that the proportion of unhappy marriages increases from the day divorce is legalized in a country. It appears among people of the highest civilization at the period of their decadence; from that time can be dated a retrograde movement in morals.

The Bible says that if a man after marrying a woman and living with her conceives a disgust of her, for some shameful fault, he shall draw out a decree of divorce, and, putting it into the woman's hands, shall send her out of his house. This was not always easily accomplished, because the majority of people did not know how to write, and the Levite or priest whom they consulted could refuse to grant their application if he saw fit.

In Egypt the laws authorized no divorce except in certain cases. Infidelity was punished severely: the man received 1,000 stripes and the woman's nose was cut. In Babylon a public auction of all the girls of a marriageable age was held once a year. The untying of these knots was even more simple.

Confucius, writing on Chinese laws, established seven cases of repudiation, among which it appears that the wife could be put aside for excessive gossip or for not getting along with her father or mother-in-law. But there was this proviso: "The husband is advised to retain her if she will wear mourning for her mother-in-law for three years." As a matter of fact the Chinese resort to the divorce courts very little, and they hold a widow marrying a second time in the utmost contempt. This custom is somewhat similar to that of the Hindoos in former years, when the widows flung themselves on the burning woodpiles upon which their husbands' bodies were being consumed.

In Burmah the women when marrying do not take their husband's names, but retain their own, with the addendum of "wife of So and So." This makes it convenient for them to assume their previous status in public knowledge when they come to be divorced, as they are very likely to be, for divorce is easy in that country.

If a Burmese wife and husband quarrel and determine to separate, the wife, who always does all the marketing, goes out and buys two little candles of equal length, which are made especially for this use. She brings them home. She and her husband sit down on the floor, place the candles between them, and light them simultaneously. One candle stands for him, the other for her. The one whose candle burns out first rises and goes out of the house forever, with nothing but what he or she may have on. The other takes all the property.

This looks fair enough on the face of it, but it often happens that the wife on her way home with the candles takes a tiny scraping from the bottom of one of them. A very little will be enough. If the husband and the house are empty of pretty much everything but children she takes the shortened candle and walks out free and content. But if the house is well furnished, and the husband's possessions are considerable, he gets the short candle and does the walking.

At Athens divorce could be obtained by demand of one of the parties or by mutual consent. The case was argued before a tribunal. The parties on being freed were expressly forbidden to marry with a person younger than themselves. Grecian wives convicted of breaking the Seventh Commandment were put to death, after having their hair cut off and their heads covered with hot ashes.

This barbarous custom was also adopted in Rome after the conquest of Carthage and Corinth. The Romans, being masters of the world, only thought of reveling in their riches, and cut themselves adrift from the austere rules of virtue, which had been theirs for centuries. Civil marriages and religious marriages were little by little cut into by divorce, which spread to such an extent as to almost suppress marriage. Nearly every cause was admitted—infidelity, sickness, old age, drunkenness, poison (which was very prevalent), going into the church, the army, and, lastly, mutual consent. The husband had the right to demand a divorce if the wife obtained false keys to the cellar, or if she went "gadding" to the theater or circus to the neglect of her household duties.

All these reasons were but pretexts, after all. The virtuous Cato obtained a divorce in order to marry Marcia, Scilla remarried with a woman whom he met at the circus; Cicero repudiated his wife to take Publilia, whose riches would enable him to pay off all his creditors; Cæsar and Antony contracted four successive marriages; Pompey went as far as five.

The law of Mahomet admits of divorce—though it is very little resorted to by the Mahometans—but exacts four months' reflection on the part of the husband before sending the letter of repudiation, which in this case is called tetoik boin—a temporary repudiation is called tetoik rid jee, which is used as a forewarning.

The nation which grants fewest divorces is England. A special court—the court for divorce and matrimonial cases—copes with all matrimonial difficulties. Divorce can be obtained for "criminal conversation," and is denied for personal injuries and neglect. A rupture of the marriage tie is granted only for infidelity, and this is known to the court as the "specific remedy."

Switzerland grants more divorces than any other country. Since the federal law of 1874 was passed the proportion has risen from forty-seven to a thousand. In Sweden since 1831, in Holland since 1851 and in Saxony since the federal law of 1875 the proportion has doubled and even tripled. In Belgium it has multiplied sixfold.

A Great Moral Lesson.

A little girl was being coaxed to own up to her aunt that she had done something which she ought not and which she stoutly denied. Finally such undeniable proof of her guilt was put before her that she could no longer keep up her denial. She turned to her aunty and said:

"Well, Aunt Kittie, you can't trust anybody nowadays."—Boston Beacon.

HUMORIST ON HUMORIST.

L. V. F. Randolph Talks of the Works of Douglas Jerrold.

A large and representative audience was present in All Souls Church, last night, when ex-Mayor L. V. F. Randolph delivered the third lecture of the series on humorists, taking for his subject, "Douglas Jerrold". Mr. Randolph possessed a wonderfully expressive manner in marking the points in his subject's character which he wished to bring out, and with true mimicry in reciting the selections of Jerrold's work to illustrate his points, he kept his hearers in almost constant laughter.

In introducing Mr. Randolph to the audience Rev. Hobart Clark referred to him as a humorist who was about to talk of another humorist, the difference being that one was dead while the other was alive.

Mr. Randolph said that judging from a great deal of Jerrold's writing, one would think that he had tasted much of the bitterness of the world from the clean cut and incisive wit which he gave vent to. But instead he was of a very cheerful mind. When but 15 years old he wrote a comedy entitled "More Frightened Than Hurt", which was received with considerable appropriation by those who witnessed it.

He had small business ability, but seemed possessed of wonderful luck. One thing that contended largely against his continued prosperity was his excessive generosity. The simplicity of his life was evidenced in his love for rural nature. He was logical in all his puns—adopting them to practical circumstances. He was not a reformer, and when occasion arose he cast ridicule upon the purists and the assumed philanthropists.

Humorist, as he was, he condemned all attempts at drollery on sacred things. "Happiness arises at our own fireside, and not is picked from strangers beds", was a piece of humor which displayed great depth of thought on his part. "If I was a grave digger or hangman, I could work for some people with pleasure", was a sample of his sarcasm.

He hated all sorts of insincerity, and was a conscientious student. His first thought in writing was to capture the eye of the reader, and then get him interested in his works.

His thoughts were genial, but not one of seriousness. Those who knew him, knew him as one of tender nature, never to turn his back on an unfortunate friend.

The paper was followed by an informal discussion.

BRIGHTEN UP.

The New Firm of E. E. Marshall & Co. Are Ready to Assist You.

The store on North avenue recently occupied by Alexander Titsworth, has been remodeled and arranged to accommodate the new wall paper and paint firm of E. E. Marshall & Co. Along the side of the store 200 racks have been built which will hold 100 rolls of wall paper, and a complete stock of the choicest designs has been placed therein, ranging in quality from white blanks at 8 cents per roll, to embossed golds at 40 cents per roll. Two new display racks, situated in the window where there is excellent light, afford an opportunity to customers to inspect and select without mistake any design or style desired. In addition to the extensive stock which is carried, orders from samples are received and filled for any of the costly decorative papers. They also carry a full line of samples of mouldings to match any design or color of paper, as well as a varied assortment of oils, varnishes, and Harrison's ready mixed paints.

A special feature of the new firm's business is the fact that they will trim, free of cost, all paper sold to paper-hangers, a saving of one-sixth in time.

Woods on Fire.

The fire department were notified last night at 9:30 from the residence of J. W. Reinhart on Belvidere avenue that the woods near there were on fire, and requesting that a company be sent out to extinguish the flames, for fear that they would finally burn up close to the house and thus endanger the structure. Chief Doane called out Alert hose wagon and went to the scene of the conflagration, where, in a few minutes, with the aid of brush and limbs, they soon beat out the flames, though further back in the woods the fire was burning briskly. It was necessary to lay a line of hose. During the night the rest of the fire subsided.

Terrible paroxysms of coughing would last hours with little interruption and it seemed as if she could not survive them. AN AWFUL FALL.

A Decayed Gutter Causes a Serious Accident to a Painter.

John Hensey and Charles Trotter, two painters who have for three weeks been engaged at their trade about Edgewood, the country home of R. F. M. Chase in the Notch, fell yesterday afternoon from a ladder from the third story of his house, Hensey sustaining serious injuries.

The two men had a portion of the structure already painted, and yesterday afternoon started to paint the west side. They work on a ladder suspended in the air by ropes tied into hooks which are hung over into the gutters for security, and as they finish a portion of the painting let themselves gradually down by the aid of tackle and pulley, until the ground is finally reached.

They had just arranged the ladders, and had been painting only a few minutes yesterday afternoon at 3, when one of the hooks tore out the gutter which had rotted away, and let one end of the ladder fall to a perpendicular position, hanging on end by the other rope. Hensey and Trotter fell with great force, the former landing on a set of stone steps leading to the basement, and breaking the thigh and two lower bones in one of his legs. Trotter was more lucky and struck on the ground, from which he received injuries that were not serious enough but what he was able to be about in a little while.

Hensey was carried into the kitchen and made as comfortable as possible while a telephone message was sent to Captain Grant. The accident occurred out of his territory, but he hunted up Chief Marshal Pangborn and the two officers went to the Chase residence; they, as soon as they saw the condition of Hensey, sent for Dr. Carman.

Shortly after the arrival of the physician it was decided to convey the unfortunate man to the hospital, and a wagon from Terrill & Cole's was called for that purpose. Upon his arrival there his fractures were reduced and the bruises dressed so that he rests as comfortable as possible under the circumstances. It will be several weeks before he will be able to be out again.

ANOTHER BAD FALL.

Painter Moore Lands on His Head After a Frightful Tumble.

Frank Moore, of 28 Chatham street, a painter employed by Marsh, Ayers & Co., fell a distance of 25 feet from a ladder this morning at 9, while painting the house of Mrs. Bullock, corner of Putnam and Kensington avenues, and sustained severe injuries. The ladder was a narrow one and in attempting to move, Moore slipped and fell, striking on his head and shoulders, and making an indenture in the earth several inches deep.

E. C. Marshall passed the place shortly after, and was called to by the other painters. He quickly saw that Moore was severely injured, and hailing a man driving by in a buggy, had the injured man taken to his home.

Dr. Hedges was called and found that no bones were broken, though he had received a severe shock, from which it will take him some time to recover.

Holy Week in the Church of the Redeemer.

Rev. Jocelyn Johnstone will give a series of sermons on the "Seven words from the Cross", beginning tomorrow afternoon, with the first word, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do", and continuing daily through the week, closing Good Friday evening with the last word, "It is finished."

The hours of services will be at 10 a. m., with the exception of Good Friday, on which day they will be held respectively at 11:15 a. m. and 8 p. m.

Fortune Gone, Family Abandoned.

(From The New York World.)

The hearing was adjourned till Saturday.

Too Heavy a Load.

One of the wheels on a wagon owned by Ed Mundy collapsed under a too-heavy load of crushed stone at the corner of West Front and Somerset streets this morning. The stone was unloaded into the street, where it lay until a new wagon was secured.

RACING BOARD SANCTION.

Crescent Bicycle Club Sure of the Decoration Day Meet.

C. E. Teel, chairman of the racing committee of the Crescent Wheelmen, yesterday received official sanction from G. D. Gideon of Philadelphia, chairman of the racing board of the L. A. W., for the meet, which has been arranged to take place on the club's oval Decoration Day. This action has been expected a long time by the Plainfield wheelmen, notwithstanding the rebellious and unsportsmanlike actions of the Rahway Bicycle Club, who have felt very disgruntled over the prospect of having one of the National circuit meets come to the Crescent club instead of to them.

For several years Rahway has had the Decoration Day meet, but this year Chairman Teel filed an application for the event a week ahead of the Rahway people, and naturally enough his application was first considered, and with a favorable result.

The Rahway club set up a great howl that the track of the Crescent Wheelmen was not conveniently located, and various other equally silly and false arguments, and as a final resort attempted to coerce the racing board into giving their sanction by threatening to withdraw from the league, and arrange a Decoration Day meet, under any circumstances, if the circuit meet should come to Plainfield.

The racing board, however, recognized the precedence of the Crescent's application and their right to this great sporting event, and the sanction, of course, followed.

Immediately upon the receipt of the official sanction Chairman Gideon sent out 500 circulars to bicycle clubs and manufacturers throughout the country, notifying them of the approval and inviting them to be present.

Happy Surprise.

A surprise is sometimes a happy event, and such Miss Mary Luckey of East Fifth street found the little surprise party given by her mother last evening.

After the excitement of the surprise had subsided, games of an amusing and exciting character were played. Miss Grace E. Overton and Miss Mary Luckey gave recitations, while Miss Mary Collier and Miss Mary Luckey each favored their friends with a piano solo.

Refreshments, followed by a dance, brought to an end a most enjoyable evening.

BUSY BOROUGH.

Mayor and Council Do Much Genuine Work.

ALL IN THE LINE OF PROGRESS.

Special Sewerage Committee Appointed—New Building Ordinance Talked of—Officers Appointed for the Year—Damages Asked for on Account of a Broken Walk—Provision for Better Fire-Gong Service—To Codify the Ordinances—Again After the Plainfield Co's Electric-Light Poles.

Judging from the manner in which the North Plainfield Council started their business last evening the coming year will be a fruitful one for that body. Mayor B. A. Hegeman, Jr., called the members together at 8:15, and Messrs. Lounsbury, Valiant, Smith and Schutt answered to the roll call of Clerk Arnold, Messrs. Peck and Howell being absent. The minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved.

Dr. W. E. Mattison, under the head of petitions, offered his services to the borough for $100 a year. It was referred to to the Committee on Streets and Public Health. Elston S. Elliott asked for permission to erect a one-story frame building at 58 and 60 Somerset street. This was referred to the Committee on Fire, Water and Lamps.

William McGrady in a communication stated that on the night of March 26 he was walking along Manning avenue and was violently thrown to the ground, dislocating his shoulder. The accident was caused, he said, through the wretched condition of a board walk. He had not been able to work since that time. He asked that damages be granted him. The matter was referred to the Committee on Laws, Ordinances and Elections.

Marshal Zachariah Wilson offered his resignation to the Council, and it was referred to the Committee on Licenses and Marshals.

Chief Marshal Pangborn reported that 26 lights had been found not burning during the month of March.

The Clerk read his financial report, ending March 1, 1895, as follows:

	Balance.	Deficit.
Borough		$1,188 29
Fire Department	$1,138 15
Light	1,631 02
Roads	123 53
	$3,092 70
Total balance		$1,994 50

The Clerk's report showed that T. R Crosley had paid over to him $36 for fines, and $11 had been received from other sources, making $47 in all. Both reports were received and filed.

Mr. Valiant for the Fire, Water and Lamps Committee recommended that better care be taken of the fire-alarm system. The matter came up later on, when an additional $50 was appropriated to the $100 already set aside, for the purpose of keeping the system in first-class condition.

The Collector's report showed the following amounts of taxes collected for 1894:

Borough	$ 25 33
Lights	121 61
Roads	86 13
Previously reported	10,812 57
Total	$11,116 57

The report was received and filed.

The usual budget of monthly bills was read, and after examination by the Auditing and Finance Committees warrants were ordered drawn for them.

J. W. VanHorn, chief marshal, filed his bond for $500 with Dr. D. C. Adams and Thomas Doud as sureties, and it was referred to the Laws, Ordinance and Election Committee.

At this time the Mayor took occasion to thank The Daily Press for the complimentary cards presented giving a list of the borough officers and standing committees.

Mr. Smith offered a resolution that the Mayor and Clerk be authorized to negotiate a loan of $1,500 for road funds, which was carried.

Mr. Schutt also offered a resolution that the salary of the chief engineer of the fire department be $100, the engineer $75, and janitor $50, a year, which was carried.

Mr. Lounsbury offered a resolution, which was carried, that the salary of the overseer of the poor be $150 a year. He offered another that a loan of $1,500 be negotiated for the borough account, and that marshals when in actual service receive 25 cents an hour, and assistant night marshals receive $50 a month. All this was adopted.

Mr. Lounsbury offered a resolution, which was carried, that the Committee on Streets and Public Health be authorized to secure bids for crushed stone in different sizes and to be delivered to suit convenience, also for crosswalks and sidewalks complete.

Mr. Valiant recommended that F. M. Lunger and Frank Kesselring be confirmed as members of Warren Engine Company, which was done.

Mr. Valiant offered a resolution, which prevailed, that the Committee on Laws, Ordinances and Election prepare all ordinances now in force for publication in pamphlet form. Mayor Hegeman suggested that they be revised carefully.

Mr. Smith offered a resolution that a warrant be drawn in favor of H. N. Spencer for $519 99 to meet the note of $500 with interest due April 14, 1895, and charge the same to the road account. It was carried.

On motion of Mr. Schutt the crosswalk asked for at Somerset and Emily streets was granted.

Mr. Valiant moved that a warrant for $512.99 be drawn in favor of H. N. Spencer to pay a second note of $500, with interest, due April 14, 1895, and charge the same to the light account, which prevailed. Also one for $1,003.15 to meet the note of $1,000, with interest, due April 11, 1895, the same to be charged to the fire department account.

On motion of Mr. Lounsbury the Clerk was authorized to have published in the two daily papers a notice to the effect that the licenses in the borough are about to expire. Mr. Lounsbury also made a motion to the effect that the fees of the dogcatcher be 50 cents for the dogs captured and redeemed, and 75 cents for those captured, killed and buried. So ordered.

Mr. Schutt offered a resolution that the Committee on Streets and Public Health be permitted to expend $50 a month on the streets when they really thought it necessary. It was so decided.

Mr. Lounsbury moved that the Committee on Licenses and Marshals secure numbers and plates, the same as are in use on the fire alarm boxes, to be used for wagons, trucks and carts for which licenses are taken out, the cost not to exceed $22, which was carried.

A resolution was offered by Mr. Smith and was adopted that a warrant for $515 57 be drawn in favor of H. N. Spencer to meet the note of $500, with interest, due April 11, 1895, the same to be charged to the light account.

Mr. Lounsbury introduced a resolution to the effect that the Plainfield Gas and Electric Light Company be given 60 days notice after May 6, to remove their poles, wires, etc., from the borough. He stated that the company had placed them there illegally, and that they had promised, if allowed to leave them there for one year, and were then given 60 days notice to remove them.

Mr. Valiant said if the removal would take away competition he would not favor it.

Mr. Lounsbury thought, however, that the company should have asked the Council for permission to erect the poles; as they had not, the poles ought to be taken down.

Borough Counsel Reed was asked to tell what he knew of the matter. He said that the company had placed their poles and wires in the borough years ago to give an exhibition of electric lighting, and had never asked for the privilege to leave them there.

Mr. Lounsbury said that the company was not in the business for their health, but for the dollars there were in it.

Mr. Valiant stated that if Mr. Lounsbury was the only man in the United States in one kind of business he would have received a larger income than he has had for the past three years. The remarks caused a general laugh.

The resolution was carried, Mr. Valiant voting No.

The Mayor brought up the matter of uniforms for the marshals, and said that he noticed that last year the borough paid half and the marshals the other half. He thought the borough should pay the entire bill, and in the case of Marshal Pangborn the $18 40 which he paid for his suit was returned to him by vote of Council on the recommendation of Mr. Lounsbury.

The Mayor then appointed the following officers:

Chief of Fire Department—G. H. Fairchild.

Engineer—P. Kelliher.

Janitor—W. Krewson.

Night Marshals—J. Lines, Mark Doud.

Specials—Israel Jones, John Stine, Samuel Moore, R. MacDonald, Fred Emmons, Israel Compton, Samuel Trayner, Charles Debele, Francis Whitely, John Goodwin, Peter Strann, John Coley.

Mr. Lounsbury offered a resolution, which was adopted, that the marshals be confirmed and that the officers appointed hold their positions till the Monday following the next borough election. Mr. Valiant moved that the three appointments for fire department take the same course, which was carried.

Mr. Lounsbury offered a resolution that suits for two marshals be secured, which was adopted.

Borough Counsel Reed made a statement in regard to the separation of the borough and township by the new law, and said that a time should be set when a division of the money belonging to both should be made. He said there was about $3,000 to be divided. Mr. Schutt moved that the Auditing and Finance Committees arrange for a meeting with the Township Committee to settle the matter. It was carried.

Mr. Lounsbury moved that when the Council adjourn it be to meet Friday evening, April 12. It was carried.

The Mayor appointed as a special sewerage committee Messrs. Peck, Lounsbury and Valiant. Mr. Valiant made a motion, which was carried, that the borough collector furnish the necessary bond of $15,000 for the faithful performance of his duty.

Mr. Lounsbury said that he thought there should be some borough ordinance governing the erection of buildings, and cited the case of the building now in course of erection on Somerset street. He did not think anyone should be allowed to build so close to the sidewalk. The Clerk said there was an ordinance at one time, but whether it would cover the case was a question.

Mr. Valiant stated that the Wooden property on Somerset street should be looked after in the same line.

The Council adjourned at 9:40, after which the Mayor gave the oath of office to Marshals John Goodwin, David Weaver, Mark Doud and Francis Whitely.

BREAK EVEN AT WHIST.

Probabilities That the Park Four Will Beat the Albanians.

The first half of the American championship whist game between the Park Club four and the Albany Whist Club took place last night in the rooms of the Union County Country Club, with the result of the contestants breaking even on a tie score of 7 to 7.

In view of the fact that the Park Club four have done their best playing in the last half of the games thus far contested since they have become the champions, there is every reason to believe that they will be the victors in the last half played tonight, and thereby retain the silver championship trophy of the American Whist League.

After the game last night a lunch was served in the Country Club's dining room. The Albanians are Messrs. E. Lodge, Jr., C. F. Snow, E. L. Smith and D. Muhlfelder.

DEMAND FROM FRANCE

England Must State Her Claims Explicitly.

Minister Hanotaux Replies to Sir Henry Grey—Nothing Warlike in His Remarks—France Will Reserve Her Decision and Liberty of Action Pending England's Reply.

Paris, April 6.—M. Hanotaux, minister of foreign affairs, spoke in the senate last night concerning Sir Edward Grey's statement in the house of commons last week. The debate in the commons as to the British and Egyptian sphere of influence in Africa, he said, had astonished him. France opposed decidedly the pretensions of the Royal Niger company, which aimed to monopolize trade in a vast region. The negotiations as to the territory affected by the company's claims were now in progress.

England Must State Her Claims.

As to the Upper Nile region, France demanded that England state her claims explicitly. France would reserve her decision and liberty of action pending England's reply. It was advisable to abstain from imprudent statements. France would maintain her plain rights.

Fears No Serious Trouble.

He preferred, however, not to make any affirmations likely to hinder the present negotiations. He was convinced that when the time of decision should come, the two great nations would find means of reconciling their interests with those of civilization and progress.

British Press Comment.

London, April 6.—The Standard will say to-day: "M. Panotaux's speech was moderate and courteous, but did not relieve the strain. In some respects it rather accentuated the points of difference. His silence as to the French expedition to the Nile valley could not have been accidental, although the subject cannot be treated as immeterial.

BIG CARGO OF ARMS.

Cuban Officials Fail To Stop a Shipment from New York To-day.

New York, April 6. — Information reached the Spanish consul that a big lot of arms and ammunition destined for the use of the revolutionists in Cuba would be shipped from this port this evening. This information was transmitted to the collector of the port and detectives were put at work. In a few hours they discovered that 1,000 stand of arms and half a million cartridges had been put aboard the Atlas line steamer Alene. They were informed that the arms and ammunition were destined for Savanilla, Colombia. Mr. Kilbreth found that he could not prevent the arms from going out, as they are not shipped to Cuba. The Spanish officials here feel sure the rifles and cartridges will eventually reach the revolutionists' hands. The steamer sails to-night.

OSCAR WILDE'S DISGRACE.

Swift and Merciless Has Been the Passion Poet's Undoing.

London, April 6.—Swift and merciless has been the undoing of Oscar Wilde. A few days ago he was prosperous, his talents were respected and all London did him honor as poet and playwright. To-day he is the inmate of a new street cell, with penal servitude, secured by his own confession, staring him in the face.

Sudden Ending of the Case.

The suit of Wilde against the marquis of Queensberry for criminal libel came to a sudden and unexpected termination shortly after the third day's proceedings were commenced in the Old Bailey. Sir Edward Clarke, leading counsel for Wilde, asking permission on behalf of his client to withdraw the suit and submit to a verdict announcing the marquis not guilty in regard to the words "posing as a ——," written by the marquis of Queensberry on a card which was left for Wilde by the marquis at the Albermarle club on February 18, and which formed the outward basis of the suit.

Queensberry's Charges True.

The judge said that if the jury was justified in agreeing upon a verdict on one part of the case they must return a verdict of guilty or not guilty as regards the entire case. The jury then rendered a verdict of not guilty, to which Sir Edward Clarke assented, and supplemented their verdict with the declaration that the charges made by the defendant against Wilde, which constituted the libel complained of, were true, and that they had been made in the public interest.

Complimented by the Court.

When the verdict was rendered the marquis of Queensberry left the dock amid loud cheers. He was complimented by the court for doing what he had in the interest of morality. The marquis of Queensberry's solicitors sent to the public prosecutor a copy of the statements of all the witnesses which the defense intended to call to the stand, a number of grooms, stable boys and porters, together with a full shorthand report of the trial so far as it had gone. Later, upon the application of the public prosecutor, a warrant was issued at the Bow street police court for the arrest of Wilde upon criminal charges growing out of the latter's own testimony.

His Escape Cut Off.

In the meantime the marquis of Queensberry, when the first congratulatory rush of his friends had sufficiently subsided, said: "I have sent this message to Wilde: 'If the county allows you to leave, all the better for the country; but if you take my son with you, I shall follow you wherever you go and shoot you.'" As soon as the verdict was made known to him, Wilde went to the Westminster bank, where he drew out the funds to his account. It is supposed that he intended to flee the country, but as he was constantly shadowed the opportunity to get away was prevented.

May Withdraw Wilde's Plays.

In an interview Mr. Alexander, of St. James's theatre, said that "The Importance of Being Earnest" would be kept on the stage, pending the public verdict. It is reported that the Criterion, to which "An Ideal Husband" was to be transferred from the Haymarket, has declined to put the play on its stage.

TO PROTECT AMERICANS.

The Marblehead and San Francisco Ordered to Asiatic Turkey.

Washington, April 6.—The United States cruiser Marblehead, now at Gibraltar, has been ordered to proceed with dispatch to Beyrut, Syria. The commander-in-chief of the European station, who will sail immediately in the San Francisco, now at Palermo, for Smyrna, as mentioned in these dispatches yesterday, was instructed to order the vessels of his command to visit also Alexandretta and Adana, to confer with the United States consuls and resident American citizens, and if it is found that there are good grounds for the apprehensions expressed in these quarters, concerning a probable massacre of Christians, to intimate to the responsible authorities that this government will afford full protection to American citizens living peacefully in that part of the world, under its treaty guarantees.

EXEMPTED FROM TAXATION.

Sultan Abdul Grants Unusual Favors to an American College in Turkey.

For this, the telegram says, thanks are due to his imperial majesty sultan Abdul Hamid II. and to Judge Terrell, the minister plenipotentiary of the United States of America to that port.

Will Drop the Play.

Detroit, Mich., April 6.—Mr. Leslie, the manager of Miss Rose Coghlan, who has been playing Oscar Wilde's "A Woman of No Importane," says it would be impossible, under the contract, to take Wilde's name off the play bills and out of the advertisements, and, therefore, it had been decided that the play should be taken out of Miss Coghlan's repertoire.

BACK FROM THE ORIENT

Furst Bismarck Returns with Her Excursionists.

All Delighted with Their Experience—Visited by Royalty and Presented with Confections and Cigarettes by the Sultan of Turkey—Demonstrations of Unfriendliness.

New York, April 6.—The Hamburg-American steamship Furst Bismarck arrived here last evening after an extended cruise. Two months ago she sailed for the Mediterranean with 200 tourists. She brought back but fifty of the original number. Those of her passengers who were seen after the vessel was docked, stated that their experience had been a delightful one.

Bismarck's Birthday on Shipboard.

On Bismarck's birthday a banquet, presided over by W. V. Keller of Boston, was given on shipboard, and the toast, "Furst Bismarck," was responded to by E. H. Clement, editor of the Boston Transcript. Captain Albers answered the toast of the good ship "Furst Bismarck." Dr. P. Falcke, son of the German consul, responded to "Services of Bismarck to His Country," and P. C. Werner answered the toast, "German American Citizens." All the men of the party responded to the toast, "The Ladies."

Visited by Royalty.

While the steamer lay at Piræus, near Athens, she was boarded by king George of Greece, the crown prince, the duke of Sparta and the ladies of the royal family, who lunched on board. At Constantinople the tourists were enabled to witness the annual procession of the sultan, followed by the women of the harem, to the mosque of Saint Sophia.

Presents from the Sultan.

After the ceremonies, the sultan presented to each woman on the steamer a tiny box of confection and to each gentleman a package of cigarettes and a box of smoking tobacco. Judging by the number of royal packages exhibited by the passengers last evening, the cigarettes were not smoked nor the confection eaten.

Unfriendly Demonstrations.

Mr. Clement, of the Boston Transcript, is authority for the statement that while the steamer was at Constantinople the Mohammedans made demonstrations of several unfriendlinesses against the Christians on the Bismarck. The Bismarck was scheduled to return on April 5, and she got in almost on the hour.

TO SAVE HIM FROM VIOLENCE.

Price Taken from Deanville and Lodged in Jail at Baltimore.

Baltimore, April 6.—Marshall E. Price, charged with the murder of Sallie E. Dean, a 14-year-old school girl, at Harmony, Caroline county, on March 25, has been brought to this city to protect him from mob violence. It is almost universally believed now that Price committed the dastardly deed. He was a member of the coroner's jury which investigated the death of the girl, and first attracted suspicion to himself through his fondness for talk. The detectives asked his co-operation and made him believe that he was a born Hawkshaw. He accompanied the officers to the spot where the murdered girl was found, and said: "After 3,000 people have looked over this place for clues, it remains for me to find the knife which cut her throat." He then unearthed a blood-stained knife within ten feet of where the body was discovered. Price is a blacksmith, 23 years old, of Harmony, and is married.

The Secret of Good Health

It is the Discovery and Prescription of a Physician.

Take Dr. Greene's Nervura Blood and Nerve Remedy.

The Great Spring Remedy for Blood and Nerves. Purely Vegetable and Harmless.

ETTA E. HAVEN.

How many are there?

Would make a startling array of figures.

Women are great sufferers from nervousness, weakness, nervous prostration and debility.

No one knows this fact better than women themselves, and the inside history of feminine lives would reveal a story of tired bodies, unstrung and excitable nerves, wearied limbs, aching heads and backs, with that exhausted, dragged out feeling which makes their lives miserable.

The well known Etta E. Haven of New Boston, Conn., writing upon the subject says:

"Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy is a wonderful remedy for nervous prostration, and those terrible tired, weak feelings that make life a burden, almost too great to bear. I feel that I cannot say enough in its praise for what it has done for me It gives one the most restful sleep, and in fact does all and more than all it claims to do. I wish every poor, tired woman on the face of the earth could be induced to try it for three days; they would then understand its value, and life would not seem so wearisome and undesirable."

Almost beyond belief.

It may seem remarkable, but we know that it is all true.

Mr. Barney Wilson, of Champlain, N.Y., says:

"I cannot describe how I felt or what I suffered.

"It seemed to be at first mostly in my head. I could not think easily, my head felt dull and strange, and I was tired and weak all over.

"I knew my nerves were weak and prostrated, that I had dyspepsia terribly; why I could scarcely eat anything from one day to another.

"I could not sleep nights, and woke mornings feeling weak, tired and dragged out. It came near being my death stroke, I tell you, and we did not know what the end would be.

"Can you believe it, I lived and suffered like this for a whole year!

"And then when I had become about hopeless, I saw the advertisement of a medicine, Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. I procured some of the druggist at once, and before I had taken two bottles I was so much better that I was astonished!

"I continued its use, and now I am feeling as well and sound as I ever was in my life. I can truly say that had it not been for Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy I should now be in my grave.

"I have recommended this wonderful remedy to all of my friends. I cannot speak too highly of this great medicine, and I earnestly recommend it to all who are suffering from disease."

MR. BARNEY WILSON.

MISS ANNA KING.

What She Says:

And it will interest you too.

Miss Anna King, who resides at 13 Diamond St., Philadelphia, writes:

"I have indeed been very ill," she said, in answer to a question. "My nerves had become so weak as to render me incapable of fulfilling my duties, I had no confidence in myself. I would at times grow so weak that it seemed as if I should never be able to move again. I could not remember anything. Dreadful shooting pains occurred frequently all through my eyes and head; often severe headaches would follow which would prostrate me for hours.

"Yes, I had several physicians, but they all said no help was possible.

"I was in despair until I took Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. By the time I had taken the first bottle I found that I had been greatly benefited. I continued its use and have now regained my original health again."

You Need a Spring Medicine.

Take Dr. Greene's Nervura Blood and Nerve Remedy.

The Great Health and Strength Restorer.

Druggists recommend and sell it for $1.00 per bottle.

Dr. Greene, 35 West 14th St., New York City, can be consulted free, personally or by letter.

PAIN BANISHED SLEEP.

A Rheumatic Tells a Wonderful Story.

Less Than Half a Bottle of Munyon's New Remedy Restored Him to Health.

James Buckley, 215 Washington street, Newark, N. J., says: "I have been suffering from rheumatism for a number of years. The pains were exceedingly severe and I could not sleep nights. The remedies I obtained did me little or no good, nor did the doctors whom I consulted. This had gone on, each recurring attack being more painful and prolonged than the previous one. I could not get relief until I commenced taking Munyon's Rheumatism Cure. Less than one-half a bottle drove all the rheumatism out of my system and I am as well and strong as I ever was in my life. I consider the remedy a wonderful one and take pleasure in recommending it."

Munyon's Rheumatism Cure is guaranteed to cure rheumatism in any part of the body. Acute or muscular rheumatism cured in from one to five days. It never fails to cure sharp, shooting pains in the arms, legs, sides, back or breast, or soreness in any part of the body in from one to three hours. It is guaranteed to promptly cure lameness, stiff and swollen joints, stiff back and all pains in the hips and loins. Chronic rheumatism sciatica, lumbago or pain in the back are speedily cured.

Munyon's Homeopathic Home Remedy Co. of Philadelphia put up specifics for nearly every disease, which are sold by all druggists, mostly for 25c. a bottle.

Those who are in doubt as to the nature of their disease should address Professor Munyon, 1505 Arch st., Philadelphia, giving full symptoms of their disease. Professor Munyon will carefully diagnose the case and give you the benefit of his advice absolutely free of all charge. The Remedies will be sent to any address on receipt of retail price.

OUTLOOK OF BUSINESS

More Settled Weather, Heavier Shipments of Wheat Abroad, Increases in Wages in Industrial Lines, Fewer Failures and Greater Volume of the Bank Clearings.

New York, April 6.—The appearance of more settled weather, together with the announced increase in prices for Bessemer pig iron and steel billets, continued strength of cotton, stimulating manufacturers to demand higher prices for fall delivery, rains in northwestern wheat regions, where greatly needed, further increases in wages of industrial employes, heavier shipments of wheat abroad, and the rush of the volume of the week's bank clearings above the $1,000,000,000 mark, are, according to Bradstreet's weekly review of the condition of business, evidences of the continuation of a better feeling in trade circles and returning confidence in many lines of business.

Noticeable Increases.

The list of increases of quotations for staples includes hides and leather, with a prospect for further advances, one result being extremely fine views of makers of shoes; cut meats at western points, as well as for cattle, and Bessemer pig iron and steel billets 50c. per ton, which result in better demand for car, wagon and implement iron, as well as for pipe and finished material generally. Bank clearings for the week, $1,013,000,000, are 14 per cent. more than in the preceeding week and 8 per cent. heavier than in the corresponding week a year ago.

Business Failures.

Some New England cotton manufacturers have sold a year's output for export, and have cheap raw material to meet the contracts. Wool and woolen industries report less activity, but the improved prospect in iron and steel, and advances in petroleum and for lumber at almost all centers, with activity in the building trades, are having an influence. There were 220 business failures reported this week, as compared with 232 throughout the United States last week, 199 in the corresponding week of 1894, 186 two years ago and 165 three years ago.

Some Active Trades.

Boston roperts prospects for continued favorable business and active trade in lumber. The weather at Pittsburg has checked spring trade, but, in addition to increased interest in iron and steel, there is activity in demand for shoes. Quite a number of Philadelphia textile manufacturers are running on orders only, but demand for hardware, petroleum, leather and lumber has improved. The volume of trade at Baltimore is equal to that of 1894, while demand for drygoods and character of collections are better. At Buffalo there is considerable activity in building circles, and improvement in trade of a week ago is continued.

STATEMENT BY ENGLAND.

It Is Said That She Will Not Seize Nicaraguan Territory.

Washington, April 6.—The announcement is made that Great Britain will not seek in her present controversy with Nicaragua to acquire any part of the latter's country. Secretary Gresham was so advised yesterday. The belief has existed here for several weeks that back of Great Britain's claim for damages against Nicaragua lay her purpose of taking forcible possession of certain parts of Nicaragua's territory.

Italy Offers Its Good Offices.

It has been suggested that Great Britain in driving a hard bargain with Nicaragua until her demands were satisfied would occupy such parts of her coast as would not only give her a foothold there, but would be a menace to the Nicaragua canal when built. The kingdom of Italy has offered its good offices to bring about a settlement of the differences between Venezuela and France and Belgium, growing out of the expulsion by the Crespo government of the diplomatic representatives of these latter countries.

M'CARTHY'S DIVORCE SUIT.

The Irish Comedian Also Wants Back Rights to Plays.

New Haven, Conn., April 6.—D. B. McCarthy, the well known Irish comedian, has brought suit in the Hartford superior court, through atttorney J. P. Goodhart, of this city, against his wife, Kittie McCarthy, for divorce. He asks for the custody of their minor child. He also claims that he leased to his wife some time ago the rights to several of his plays, from which she derives an income of $5,000 a year. He will sue to recover the possession of the rights to the title of the plays again.

O'BRIEN BREAKS DOWN.

When Confronted with Waddell's Corpse He Admits His Crime.

Paris, April 6.—O'Brien was confronted with Waddell's body at the morgue. He broke down completely, it is said, and admitted his crime. Later he confessed his identity. He declared, however, that the portrait sent from New York was not his, but his brother's.

To Be Launched Next Wednesday.

Philadelphia, April 6.—The steamship St. Paul, which failed to move off the ways at Cramp's shipyard on March 25, will be launched on Wednesday afternoon next, April 10. Miss Frances G. Griscom will christen the vessel, and the ceremonies will be about the same as those arranged for on the previous occasion. No special invitations will be issued.

Balfour at Buenos Ayres.

London, April 6.—A despatch from Buenos Ayres says that Jabez Spencer Balfour, the Liberator wrecker, has arrived there, apparently very much depressed. He is expected to sail next Monday.

Kipling at the White House.

Washington, April 6.—Rudyard Kipling, the author, visited the white house yesterday. He came with Secretary Lamont, who introduced him to the president and the members of the cabinet.

TO SOLVE THE STRIKE QUESTION

Plans for a System of Laws Fixing the Minimum Rates of Wages.

Albany, April 6.—Several members of the assembly who are regarded as specially friendly to the labor cause are receiving through the mails copies of a recent number of a New York labor paper containing an elaborate article by Mr. Alphonse Major, a well known manufacturer, urging a unique scheme of aggressive labor legislation. The article is entitled "Protection to Labor," and proposes the enactment of laws by congress and the state legislatures fixing scales of "living wages" for all trades.

Strikes of No Avail.

It argues that the time has gone by when strikes can be of any avail to the working classes as a means of protecting them against the destructive competition of cheap labor, and insists that unless something radical is done by national and state legislative authority to keep wages on a fair basis the laboring people throughout the country will be rapidly ground down to the standards of starvation wages prevailing in the most despotic nations of the old world.

The Remedy Suggested.

Mr. Major therefore advocates a system of laws establishing minimum rates of wages for all kinds of labor, with suitable penalties for every employer violating them. He maintains that the first application of such laws should be to all contract work engaged for by the federal, state, county and municipal governments, no bidder to receive a contract unless he conforms to laws prescribing "living wages" for all employes.

Attempt for Legislative Action.

This scheme is presented as a substitute for the socialistic ideas of the day. One of the special merits claimed for it is that it would immediately solve the strike question. The interest taken by the labor people generally in these propositions is likely to result in a bill embodying their main features. It is too late in the session for such a measure to stand much chance of passage, but a strong attempt in behalf of it is expected to be made next year.

GRESHAM OFF FOR A SAIL.

He Will Spend Sunday at Fortress Monroe—Badly in Need of Rest.

Washington, April 6.—Secretary Gresham left Washington last evening by steamer for Fortress Monroe, where he will spend Sunday, returning to this city according to his present intention on Monday morning. Although the secretary professes to feel as well as he ever did, he has taken a few days at the seashore in deference to the deep concern manifested by his family and closest friends, who declare that he is overworked. Affairs requiring consideration by the department of state have seldom been so exacting as during the past few months, and every one in the department has suffered from the unusual strain. Nearly all the important officials as well as many of the clerical force have been employed on an average from twelve to fourteen hours every day. Secretary Gresham expects to make frequent trips of a day or two each from Washington this summer, but anticipates no regular vacation unless, possibly, a few weeks' stay at Buzzard's bay in August. Mrs. Gresham and her son, Colonel Otto Gresham, of Chicago, will sail from New York July 25 for six weeks in Europe.

MORE NEW YORK INDICTMENTS.

Four Prominent ex-City Officials Said To Be on the List.

New York, April 6.—The extraordinary oyer and terminer grand jury has finished its labors by bringing in four indictments in which several men are accused, and recommending that all the departments of the city government be investigated the same as the police department has been investigated. The indicted men will be gathered in to-day. An authority which cannot be questioned gave the following as among the persons indicted: Thomas J. Brady, formerly superintendent of buildings; Nathan Straus, formerly park commissioner; Abraham B. Tappen, formerly park commissioner, and Thomas Killilea, police captain. An attempt was made to have Superintendent Byrnes indicted through Dr. and Mrs. Whitehead, but it failed.

CLARK AND M'KAY CLEARED.

They Took No Part in the Meeting of Cuban Sympathizers.

Washington, April 6.—This statement has just been given out at the department of justic: "The attorney general has received authentic information from Jacksonville, Fla., to the effect that neither United States Attorney Clark nor United States Marshal McKay participated in the meeting of Cuban sympathizers at Jacksonville, Fla., Thursday, and all reports to the contrary are false."

Decision in the Hearns Case.

New Haven, Conn., April 6.—The supreme court has handed down its decision in the famous case of Hugh Hearns vs. the Waterbury hospital, an action brought to recover $11,000 damages. The court finds no error in the decision of the lower court in overruling the plaintiff's demurrer to the defense.

Delay for Train-Robber Morgan.

Fredericksburg, Va., April 6.—Judge C. H. Ashton, on petition for Charles A. Morgan, the Aquia creek train robber has granted a further suspension of the execution of sentence for fifteen days to enable him to perfect his appeal.

Ordered To Leave Yale.

New Haven, Conn., April 6.—The Yale faculty has ordered Harry Moffat Wilson to leave college. He refused to be vaccinated. Wilson is a freshman and lives in Newburg, N. Y. His father is an anti-vaccinationist.

Death of a Well Known Lawyer.

Boston, April 6.—Chauncey Smith, one of the best known patent lawyers in the country, died at his home in Cambridge last evening. He was at one time counsel for the Bell Telephone company.

Stiles Divorce Case Ended.

Chicago, April 6.—Judge Ewing denied the motion of Mr. Stiles' attorney to reopen the Stiles divorce case for the purpose of producing further testimony in the suit decided Thursday.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh that Contain Mercury,

as mercury will surely destroy the sence of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is ten fold to the good you can derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally, and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co. Testimonials free.

My neighbor's jackass made more noise
Than all the hens in my back lot.
The jackass' bray was nothing worth,
But each day found eggs in my pot.
To tell the town of his new store
My neighbor scattered posters wide.
I used The Press—a page or more;
My store was filled; my neighbor—died.

TWENTY-FIVE YEARS A SUFFERER.

Complete Recovery—A Simple Remedy.

From Advance Argus, Greenville, Mercer Co., Pa.

"With feelings of uncertainty Mrs. Wilt began the use of Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, but today it has no better friend than she. Mrs. Wilt is well known here, for she has lived for years within a few miles of Greenville. The following letter, addressed to Dr. Kennedy, will be interesting reading for many a sick person.

"Dear Sir: For 25 years I have been troubled with sick and nervous headaches, so bad that much of the time I was utterly prostrated. I tried many medicines, but they failed to do me any good. Last spring my son was using Favorite Remedy, and he insisted on my trying it. I did so, and used less than a bottle, and found it was just the medicine I needed, for I have not had a headache since.

"It also benefited me in other ways, for my health was poor, and it acted as a tonic. I hope this letter will reach the eye of some poor sufferer, for I know if they will only try Favorite Remedy they will be thankful for it. Yours truly, Mrs. Lizzie C. Wilt, Greenville, Penn."

Such a mark of commendation proves the great value of this medicine

Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy is pronounced by physicians as the superior of all blood medicines and nerve restorers. It cures rheumatism, neuralgia, nervous and bilious headaches and nervous prostration. It is a specific for scrofula, erysipelas, dyspepsia, and for the troubles peculiar to the female system.

Those who never read the advertisements in their newspapers miss more than they presume. Jonathan Kenison, of Bolan, Worth Co., who had been troubled with rheumatism in his back, arms and shoulders, read an item in his paper about how a prominent German citizen of Fort Madison had been cured. He procured the same medicine, and to use his own words: "It cured me right up." He also says: A neighbor and his wife were both sick in bed with rheumatism. Their boy was over to my house and said they were so bad that he had to do the cooking. I told him of Chamberlain's Pain Balm and how it had cured me, he procured a bottle of it and it cured them up in a week. 50 cent bottles for sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy, Park and North aves. T. S. VIII.—EMERGENCE.

For Napoleon, Toulon was the open gate to greatness. His "destiny," for which he sought so diligently, came to him unawares among the guns of his battery there. Those guns were trained first on Fort L'Eguillette, and then on the British ships of Admiral Hood. Our ships, including the good ship Orient, in which, after four years and seven months, we shall embark for Egypt, are pent up in a nook of the harbor. Over the town, through October and November, floats the banner of St. George. The Lily flag of the Bourbons has given place, not to the new Tricolor of the Revolution, but to the foreign ensign of a hated foe; under that are rallied the Royalists of Toulon. It is to be noted that the first and the last of Napoleon's guns are directed against the flag of England. From Toulon to Waterloo! There lies the space of twenty-one years and six months—filled with the wreck and transformation of the world!

Here, on the beautiful Mediterranean shore, the great act begins. A division of the French National army has been sent to retake the traitorous town. The commanders are General Doppet, who from being a doctor has taken to this fighting form of patriotism, and General Dugommier, an officer who, fourteen years ago, was with Lafayette in our American army of Independence. Others of military experience hold subordinate commands; and here also are several representatives from the National Convention.

The latter, under orders of that body, are darting hither and yon like arrows, to sting whoever shall be unfaithful to the Revolution. Some fly to the field of Valmy, where, in the wood of Argonne, they dart about with eyes sharper than swords. Others are on the track of Dumouriez, toward Belgium and the Netherlands, where he struggles to drive back the Germans; and does it. Others are with Custine's army, and still others here at Toulon, watching everything, and making fatal report of any blunder. Hither have come Barras himself, and Freron, and Salicetti, the Corsican representative in the assembly, and in particular Augustin Robespierre, called the Younger, destined in the day of doom to leap ingloriously from the window of the Convention hall, into a horrid cesspool in the alley!

Among these moves the taciturn Captain Bonaparte. On the 19th of October he is promoted to be major and chef-de-

Bataillon. He is placed at the head of the artillery—his own place, as events will show. Tradition has it that he eats little; sleeps among his gun-carriages; laughs not at all (except once, when a young man by his side dodging from a shell is cut in two by it!); is sun-tanned to a bronze. He with the rest sees that Toulon is not taken; but unlike the rest he studies the map, and going from place to place, uses his spy-glass. He looks many times at Fort L'Eguillette, where the British flag is flying. Toulon is indeed strong. Admiral Hood says that he will beat back this French army and make the place still stronger. He will make it a second Gibraltar—if the unforeseen do not prevent him.

But the unforeseen prevents. For more than two months the siege pounds itself away in vain. Then there is a council of war. The older officers, thoroughly imbued with military "science," suggest this method and that method of taking the town. The National representatives look on. Toulon must be taken; and the Convention has sent an impossible plan of doing it. It comes Napoleon's time to speak. "Yonder," says he, "is Fort L'Eguillette. Take that; it is the key to all. Here into that ravine is a line of approach—to a certain point. Let us send thither a storming column, under protection of my guns. I will pound the fort with shells, till the point is reached. Then there shall be a pause. Out of the hollow shall spring my column. One bound, like the leap of a cat-o'-mountain, and the fort is ours. We will turn the guns on the town, and on Hood's ships. Everything shall be inside out in an hour!"

Here, then, is audacity. Dugommier and Doppet and the rest purse up their mouths and look wise. This is dangerous; but Major Bonaparte may try it! So on the 19th of December, 1793, he tried it; and the thing was done. Fort L'Eguillette was bombarded, and carried by storm. The Royalists fled to the British ships, and Hood took wing by sea. Toulon was not made into "another English Gibraltar." The Revolution has Toulon, and will keep it forever. The National representatives see who it is that has done this. Only three days afterwards Napoleon is nominated general of Brigade. He is now twenty-four years four months old. His appointment is approved—after a little delay; and on the 16th of February, 1794, he receives his commission.

Similar scenes were witnessed in many places. Marseilles had a like insurrection and overthrow. Lyons was held by the Royalists until, under the assaults of the Revolutionary forces, the powder-magazines—four of them together—were set on fire, and hurled skyward with a hundred and seventeen houses, all settling back in hideous ruin and confusion. The hospital was demolished by the infuriated assailants, and the town virtually destroyed. Mentz was taken in like manner. So also Montpellier and Bourdeaux and Nantes and Caen. Everywhere royalism was stamped into the earth—exterminated. Throughout the valley of the Rhone, along the eastern frontier, and in the coast-towns of the Mediterranean noises of furious bombardment was heard, and columns of significant smoke were seen rising here and there. The Revolution was triumphant; and thousands of stone-masons were set to work demolishing the walls of rebellious cities. Not an inch of French soil in all those borders remained to the adherents of the ancient order and their foreign allies.

After Toulon, the name of Bonaparte was heard in Paris. The younger Robespierre informed the Convention that he was "of transcendent merit." The report of Dugommier said, "Among those who distinguished themselves most and who most aided me to rally the troops and push them forward are citizens Buona Parte [do you not know how to spell him yet, General?] commanding the artillery; also Arena and Cervoni, adjutants-general." The success of the chef-de-Bataillon in the siege and capture, and the favorable reports of it produced a sensation in the National Convention; but the impression on that body and on the public was as yet only transient. At this epoch, when all quarters of France were shaken with commotions and local revolutions, the brilliant capture of a single fort and town on the Mediterranean was not enough to create a permanent military fame. The Convention contented itself with making General Bonaparte "Inspector" of the coast-country, between the Rhone and the Var. His duty was to maintain order in that region, and to complete the Revolution. The appointment was made on the 26th of December, only a few days after the fall of Toulon. The duty imposed made it necessary for him to traverse the districts extending from Marseilles to Cannes—a maritime region which had been mortally infected with royalism.

By the close of the year, however, the old spirit was virtually extinguished in Southeastern France; and Napoleon found little to satisfy his restless spirit. His tours of inspection and duties connected therewith occupied his time until February of 1794, when he was recalled to Paris. That city was now a seething cauldron. The Reign of Terror was at its acme. That period, unparalleled in human annals, extended from March of 1793, when the Revolutionary tribunal was organized, to July 28th of the following year, when Robespierre and his colleagues were sent to the guillotine. Strange that in the midst of all the horror rising on horrors accumulated in the French capital there was still an outstretched arm of strength bearing a sword of sharpness for foreign nations! The military organization was completed as follows:

The Army of the North was created and put under command of Generals Jourdan, Leclerc, Vandamme, Brune, and Mortier. The Army of the Rhine was commanded by Generals Pichegru, Scherer and Berthier. The Army of the West was organized with Marceau and Eleber as commanders. The Army of Italy was commanded by Duerbion and Massena; and to this General Bonaparte was assigned as chief of the artillery and assistant in the preparation of plans for the campaign. He was thus occupied in Paris at the time when it became the saying, La guillotine va toujours—the guillotine goes always!

It was the duty of the Army of Italy to occupy that country as a vantage ground against the coalitions that were forming beyond the Rhine. The Italian towns and States were wavering according to race prejudice and interest between affiliation with the French Republic and the "protection" of Germany. By the sickness of Dumerbion, General Massena came to the chief command of this division of the French National forces. A campaign was undertaken in July of 1794, but the general of artillery did not, for the present, leave Paris. He was soon despatched, however, as an agent under orders of the Convention, to Genoa. He was to protest to the Genoese authorities against the permission which seemed to be extended to the coalition to occupy the neutral territory. It was a delicate business; for the other officers did not understand the true nature of the instructions; and the delegates Salicetti and Albitte were themselves ignorant of what was really intended.

The result was that Bonaparte was first misunderstood and then distrusted in his negotiations with the Genoese government. He was openly directed to protest against the occupation of the territory of Genoa by the enemies of France; but secretly he was authorized to examine the fortresses of the city and make notes on the general topography of that region. While engaged in this work, he was suddenly suspended from office, put under arrest, and declared to be suspected. For the nonce, the sword of Damocles was hung above him by a single thread.

Just at this juncture, however, ere Napoleon could be hauled before the Revolutionary tribunal, that body itself was blown into death-blackness by a counter revolution. Robespierre and his bloody clique were seized, after a day or two of horrid broil in the city, and were sent maimed, dazed, jaw-broken, bone-broken, headlong to the guillotine. In that case, the other saying of the hour, namely, "the guillotine goes not badly," was graciously verified!

The destruction of the tribunal had a paradoxical effect on the interest of Napoleon. It was from that body that his secret instructions had emanated. Therefore his friends were dead; also, his witnesses. But their plunge into oblivion left behind a lurid trail that scorched him. It was now said that Augustin Robespierre had been too much the friend of General Bonaparte! Like Cæsar in the matter of his intrigue with Catiline, the hero of Toulon was seriously compromised with the members of the Terror. Left to his own resources, however, he wrote a powerful and audacious protest to the Representatives Albitte and Salicetti; convinced them of his innocence; won them over to his cause; obtained from them a report of exculpation; and after thirteen days of mortal peril was set at liberty! On his return to Paris, in August of 1795, his defense was accepted by the ministry of war, and he was offered the command of a brigade of infantry in the Army of the West, with orders to operate against the Royalists of La Vendee. He refused to accept either the field of operations or the infantry arm of service; and for this the Committee of Public Safety—intolerant of all refusals—struck his name from the list of general officers, and he was once more turned adrift in Paris.

CASTORIA

for Infants and Children.

MOTHERS, Do You Know that Paregoric, Bateman's Drops, Godfrey's Cordial, many so-called Soothing Syrups, and most remedies for children are composed of opium or morphine?

Do You Know that opium and morphine are stupefying narcotic poisons?

Do You Know that in most countries druggists are not permitted to sell narcotics without labeling them poisons?

Do You Know that you should not permit any medicine to be given your child unless you or your physician know of what it is composed?

Do You Know that Castoria is a purely vegetable preparation, and that a list of its ingredients is published with every bottle?

Do You Know that Castoria is the prescription of the famous Dr. Samuel Pitcher, That it has been in use for nearly thirty years, and that more Castoria is now sold than of all other remedies for children combined?

Do You Know that the Patent Office Department of the United States, and of other countries, have issued exclusive right to Dr. Pitcher and his assigns to use the word "Castoria" and its formula, and that to imitate them is a state prison offense?

Do You Know that one of the reasons for granting this government protection was because Castoria had been proven to be absolutely harmless?

Do You Know that 35 average doses of Castoria are furnished for 35 cents, or one cent a dose?

Do You Know that when possessed of this perfect preparation, your children may be kept well, and that you may have unbroken rest?

Well, these things are worth knowing. They are facts.

The fac-simile signature of Chas. H. Fletcher. is on every wrapper.

JOHN BULL'S WARSHIPS

Preparing To Frighten Nicaragua Into Settlement.

Several Insignificant British Vessels Working Towards the Little Republic—An Experienced Officer in Command—Their Movements Attracting Little Attention.

Washington, April 6.—The flagship of the British squadron in the Pacific, which arrived at Panama Wednesday morning, has been cruising along the coast of South America having left Coquimbo, Chili, February 27, and after a month's stay at Callao, proceeded north. It is presumed that she will visit Corinto, Nicaragua, which is the nearest port to Managua, the capital, before April 16, when Great Britain expects an answer to her ultimatum. The small British cruiser Wild Swan, which left Callao March 7 and is now in the vicinity of Panama, will join the Royal Arthur at Corinto.

Little Concern at Washington.

Officials in Washington express little concern about the movements of these ships as they are not particularly formidable vessels. The Royal Arthur is unarmored, although possessing a very heavy battery. She is a twin screw, sheathed ship of 7,700 tons, similar to the Columbia and Minneapolis, but compared to them her horse power is small, being only 12,000 to their 21,000, and her coal capacity is only 850 tons, while the American racers carry 2,450 tons each. She is 360 feet long, 24 feet draught and was built in 1891. She mounts one 22-ton rifle, twelve 6-inch quick firing, twelve 6-pounders, five 3-pounders and seven machine guns.

An Experienced Officer in Charge.

The Wild Swan is an insignificant vessel. Rear Admiral Henry F. Stephenson commands the flagship and is an experienced officer who will probably be relied upon to exercise considerable caution in trying to frighten Nicaragua into paying damages for the expulsion of Vice-Consul Hatch. The only other ships of the British Pacific station are the Hyacinth, 950 tons, which was at Callao last month; the Nymphe, 2,000 tons, which left Honolulu for Esquimault, March 17; and the Pheasant, 1,200 tons, under repairs at Esquimault.

Our Powerful Force of Vessels.

It is not likely that many, if any, British war vessels will threaten the east coast of Nicaragua. It is notable that Admiral Meade's squadron is not likely to mortify British officers by meeting them in the West Indies just now. Of the American Pacific squadron, the flagship Philadelphia is at Honolulu, and will remain here at least a month; the Ranger left Panama for Buenaventura yesterday; the Alert is at Panama; the Bennington will sail south from Mare island April 15; the armored Monterey will be well on her way to Corinto next week, and the Olympia is in Santa Barbara channel preparing for inspection. The United States vessels on the Atlantic coast constitute the most powerful force ever available in times of peace. The New York, Amphrite, Minneapolis, Columbia, Cincinnati, Raleigh, Montgomery, Atlanta and Chicago are ready for action, while the Katahdin, Maine and Miantonomah could be made ready for duty in a few weeks.

DEFIED THE COURT.

Religious Exercises Still Kept Up in the Waverly, Pa., School.

Scranton, Pa., April 6.—Despite the injunction of Judge Gunster, restraining Professor Hanyon, principal of the Waverly borough school, from reading the bible in the school, the usual religious exercises have been held all this week. The school board held a meeting and after a heated discussion directed Professor Hanyon to continue reading the bible in the school, as the board did not believe there was anything in the constitution or laws of Pennsylvania forbidding it. It is said that Professor Hayon and the members of the board of school directors who voted for the order will be summoned before Judge Gunster and arraigned for contempt of court for disobeying the injunction granted.

May Rescind the Order.

New York, April 6.—Collector Kilbreth says there is a disposition on the part of Secretary Carlisle to rescind the present regulations which permits vessels which arrive at quarantine after nightfall to come to their dock. If vessels are allowed to do this it will involve an additional expense for extra inspectors. The treasury department wants the steamship companies to shoulder this expense, but they don't seem inclined to do so.

Scale of Wages for Bricklayers.

Philadelphia, Pa., April 6.—A scale of wages for bricklayers for the ensuing season has been agreed upon by the Journeymen Bricklayers' union and the bricklayers company. The scale is 46 to 50 cents per hour for entirely capable hands, and 40 to 45 cents an hour for men who can only do rough work.

Have Not Exchanged Views.

London, April 6.—The Morning Post will publish to-day a paragraph to the effect that inquiries at the foreign office elicited the fact that the United States and England have not exchanged views regarding England's trouble with Venezuela.

Carson Mint Shortage.

Carson, Nev., April 6.—Shortages approximating $90,000 have already been found in the mint by Superintendent Mason, of the government assay office, New York, who is here in charge of the investigation.

For Yachts of All Classes.

London, April 6.—The Field learns that in the Olympian games at Athens next year there will be races for yachts of all classes, probably under the rules of the Yacht Racing association.

Valkyrie III.

London, April 6.—The Field will say to-day: Valkyrie III. is completely framed and the planking is now proceeding. It will be impossible for her to take part in the early matches in the south.

Delaware Senatorship Deadlock.

Dover, Del., April 6.—Yesterday's ballot for United States senator resulted: Higgins 9, Massey 4, Addicks 5, Pennewill 1, Ridgely 9, Martin 1.

Paine's Celery Compound the One Spring Remedy that Makes People Well.

Physicians Prescribe It, Use It, and Advise People to Take It in Preference to Anything Else in April and May, Because It Purifies the Blood, Feeds the Brain, and Strengthens the Nerves.

Paine's celery compound is not a patent medicine.

No class of professional men are more conservative more careful in giving advice, or more painstaking in finding out the real facts of a case than physicians.

Their recommendation in matters with which they are conversant is trustworthy When physicians of known repute not only prescribe and use, but also bring home Paine's celery compound for their own families, there can be no doubt of its high standing in the eyes of medical men in general.

This is what busy, successful practitioners are doing these spring days all over the country.

Paine's celery compound is prepared, as they all well know, from the formula of the foremost physician of this century, Prof. Edward E. Phelps, M. D., LL. D., of Dartmouth medical school. Among medical men there is an absolute certainty as to just what Paine's celery compound is capable of doing. The careful record of the vast number of cases where it has made people well has been published in the medical journals of the country.

Paine's celery compound stands today as the one thoroughly authenticated remedy for weakness and debility due to malnutrition of the nervous system and impure blood.

This hard working, earnest class of professional men have never been slow in accepting Paine's celery compound.

They declare that it gives the tired body every possible chance to get back to a healthy condition. It cures nervous weakness, heart palpitation, general lack of strength, and all forms of weakness; rests and restores the jaded, fatigued brain and nerves, because it provides for the abnormal waste of these parts by an unusually prompt supply of appropriate nerve food. It purifies the blood as nothing else can do.

If every man and woman plagued with frequent headaches, and every business man made anxious by pain at the base of the brain and neuralgia twinges, would take Paine's celery compound, the world would be lightened of a vast deal of misery that ought never to be borne.

The most advanced medical thought of the latter quarter of the 19th century has prepared Paine's celery compound to meet and overcome these troubles that are due to ill-fed, ill-regulated nerves, and poor, thin blood.

N. N. Leaneard, M. D., of Charlestown, Mass., whose portrait appears above, one of the ablest physicians in the Boston district, a man of character and influence, says:

"After using Paine's celery compound for four or five years in my general practice, I can cheerfully recommend it. For catarrh of head or stomach, for instance, it acts like a charm. For women in many cases it is a blessing. For chronic rheumatism it does give relief. Torpid liver, general debility, constipation, pains in stomach and loss of appetite it relieves, and is the best of remedies in general nervous prostration. I recommend it to many of my patients, believing, as I do, in its real merits, I believe it a public blessing to invalids, and, as yet, not fully appreciated."

J. C. Flynn, M. D., a well known Michigan physician, is but one of hundreds who prescribe Paine's celery compound because it cures. Writing from Warren in that State he says: "I use the Paine's celery compound freely in my practice as a nerve tonic, blood purifier and general tonic in all debilitated conditions of the system. I find it a fine thing for patients recovering from the grip, especially old people."

Dr. J. H. Hanaford, of Reading, Mass., whose writings in the Household, Health and Home, and other journals of national circulation, have endeared him to thousands, says: "I have used Paine's celery compound personally with much benefit. I prescribe it with excellent results."

J. H. Thomas, M. D., 320 Liberty st., Pittsburg, Penn., says: "For several months I had been suffering from rheumatism. I had taken all the usual remedies with no real benefit. I took one bottle of Paine's celery compound and found myself much improved. The second bottle is nearly gone and I consider myself cured."

W. W. Hibbard, M. D., of Poultney, Vt., writes: "I was run down down from repeated attacks of the grip, and my stomach, bowels and kidneys were out of order. I had no strength, energy or ambition to think or act, and was excessively nervous and irritable. After taking the first bottle of Paine's celery compound I felt better. The third bottle restored me to my usual health and strength, and I feel ten years younger than before."

Dr. William Brown of Fredonia, Kan.: "It has wonderfully improved my general health."

W. Allen Hubbard, M. D., Boston, Mass., writes. "I have prescribed the remedy in a number of cases where the blood was impoverished and the nerves weakened. The results have been so satisfactory that I do not hesitate to endorse Paine's celery compound."

Similar testimonials literally by hundreds might be quoted. The high scientific attainments of A. Livezey, A. M., M. D., of Yardley, Penn., have made his statements authority on matters pertaining to health. He gives his personal experience, how he was cured of sleeplessness. J. W. Ferguson, M. D., of Thayer, Kan., tells how it has cured him of dyspepsia, etc., etc. The sum total of the testimony of such men as these, as well as of the more celebrated physicians whose letters have been previously published in these columns, is that Paine's celery compound makes people well!

THE CHRONICLES OF MARTIN HEWITT

BY ARTHUR MORRISON.

THE CASE OF THE MISSING HAND.

[Copyright, 1895, by Bacheller, Johnson and Bacheller.]

CHAPTER I.

I think I have recorded in another place Hewitt's frequent aphorism that "there is nothing in this world that is at all possible that has not happened or is happening in London." But there are many strange happenings in this matter-of-fact country, and in these matter-of-fact times, that occur far enough from London. Fantastic crimes, savage revenges, medieval superstitions, hellish cruelty, though less in sight, have been no more extinguished by the advent of the nineteenth century than have the ancient races who practiced them in the dark ages. Some of the races have become civilized and some of the savageries are heard of no more. But there are survivals in both cases. I say these things, having in my mind a particular case that came under the personal notice of both Hewitt and myself—an affair that brought one up standing with a gasp and a doubt of one's era.

My good uncle, the colonel, was not in the habit of gathering great house parties at his place at Ratherby, partly because the place was not a great one and partly because the colonel's gout was. But there was an excellent bit of shooting for two or three guns, and even when he was unable to leave the house himself my uncle was always pleased if some good friend was enjoying a good day's sport in his territory. As to myself, the good old soul was in a perpetual state of offense because I visited him so seldom, though whenever my scant holidays fell in a convenient time of the year I was never insensible to the attractions of the Ratherby stubble. More than once had I sat by the old gentleman when his foot was exceptionally troublesome, amusing him with accounts of some of the doings of Martin Hewitt, and more than once had my uncle expressed his desire to meet Hewitt himself, and commissioned me with an invitation to be presented to Hewitt at the first likely opportunity for a joint excursion to Ratherby. At length I persuaded Hewitt to take a fortnight's rest, coincident with a little vacation of my own, and we got down to Ratherby within a few days past September 1, and before a gun had been fired on the colonel's bit of shooting. The colonel himself we found confined to the house, with his foot on the familiar rest, and though ourselves were the only guests we managed to do pretty well together. It was during this short holiday that the case I have mentioned arose.

When first I began to record some of the more interesting of Hewitt's operations, I think I explained that such cases as I myself had not witnessed I should set down in impersonal narrative form, without intruding myself. The present case, so far as Hewitt's work was concerned, I saw, but there were circumstances which led up to it that we only fully learned afterwards. These circumstances, however, I shall put in their proper place—at the beginning.

The Fosters were a fairly old Ratherby family, of whom Mr. John Foster had died by an accident at the age of about forty, leaving a wife twelve years younger than himself and three children, two boys and one girl, who was the youngest. The boys grew up strong, healthy, out-of-doors young ruffians, with all the tastes of sportsmen and all the qualities, good and bad, natural to lads of fairly well-disposed characters allowed a great deal too much of their own way from the beginning. Their only real bad quality was an unfortunate knack of bearing malice, and a certain savage vindictiveness toward such persons as they chose to consider their enemies. With the louts of the village they were at unceasing war, and indeed once got into serious trouble for peppering the butcher's son (who certainly was a great blackguard) with sparrow shot. At the usual time they went to Oxford together and were fraternally sent down together in their second year, after enjoying a spell of rustication in their first. The offense was never specifically mentioned about Ratherby, but was mourned of as something particularly outrageous.

It was at this time, sixteen years or thereabout, after the death of their father, that Henry and Robert Foster first saw and disliked Mr Jonas Sneathy, a director of penny banks and small insurance offices. He visited Ranworth (the Fosters' house) a great deal more than the brothers thought necessary, and, indeed, it was not for lack of rudeness on their part that Mr. Sneathy failed to understand, as far as they were concerned, his room was preferred to his company. But their mother welcomed him, and in the end it was announced that Mrs. Foster was to marry again and that after that her name would be Mrs. Sneathy.

Hereupon there were violent scenes at Ranworth. Henry and Robert denounced their prospective stepfather as a fortune-hunter, a snuffler, a hypocrite. They did not stop at broad hints as to the honesty of his penny banks and insurance offices, and the house straightway became a house of bitter strife. The marriage took place, and it was not long before Mr. Sneathy's real character became generally obvious. For months he was a model, if somewhat sanctimonious, husband, and his influence over his wife was complete. Then he discovered that her property had been strictly secured by her first husband's will, and that, willing as she might be, she was unable to raise money for her new husband's benefit, and was quite powerless to pass to him any of her property by deed of gift. Hereupon the man's nature showed itself. Foolish woman as Mrs. Sneathy might be, she was a loving, indeed an infatuated wife, but Sneathy repaid her devotion by vulgar derision, never hesitating to state plainly that he had married her for his own profit, and that he considered himself swindled in the result. More, he even proceeded to blows and other practical brutality of a sort only devisable by a mean and ugly nature. This treatment, at first secret, became open, and in the midst of it Mr. Sneathy's penny banks and insurance offices came to a grievous smash all at once, and everybody wondered why Mr. Sneathy kept out of gaol.

Keep out of gaol he did, however, for he had taken care to remain on the safe side of the law, though some of his co-directors learnt the taste of penal servitude. But he was beggared and lived, as it were, a mere pensioner in his wife's house. Here his brutality increased to a frightful extent, till his wife, already broken in health in consequence, went in constant fear of her life and Miss Foster passed a life of weeping misery. All her friends' entreaties, however, could not persuade Mrs. Sneathy to obtain a legal separation from her husband. She clung to him, with the excuse—for it was no more—that she hoped to win him to kindness by submission, and with a pathetic infatuation that seemed to increase as her bodily strength diminished.

Henry and Robert, as may be supposed, were anything but silent in these circumstances. Indeed they broke out violently again and again and more than once went near permanently injuring their worthy stepfather. Once especially, when Sneathy, absolutely without provocation, made a motion to strike his wife in their presence, there was a fearful scene. The two sprang at him like wild beasts, knocked him down and dragged him to the balcony with the intention of throwing him out of the window. But Mrs. Sneathy impeded them, hysterically imploring them to desist.

"If you lift your hand to my mother," roared Henry, gripping Sneathy by the throat till his fat face turned blue and banging his head against the wall, "if you lift your hand to my mother again I'll chop it off—I will! I'll chop it off and drive it down your throat!"

"We'll do worse," said Robert, white and frantic with passion. "We'll hang you—hang you to the door! You're a proved liar and thief, and you're worse than a common murderer. I'd hang you to the front door for two pence!"

For a few days Sneathy was comparatively quiet, cowed by their violence. Then he took to venting redoubled spite on his unfortunate wife, always in the absence of her sons, well aware that she would never inform them. On their part, finding him apparently better behaved, in consequence of their attack, they thought to maintain his wholesome terror, and scarcely passed him without a menace, taking a fiendish delight in repeating the threats they had used during the scene, by way of keeping it present to his mind.

"Take care of your hands, sir," they would say. "Keep them to yourself, or by George we'll take 'em off with a bill hook!"

But his revenge for all this Sneathy took, unobserved, on their mother. Truly a miserable household.

Soon, however, the brothers left home, and went to London by way of looking for a profession. Henry began a belated study of medicine, and Robert made a pretense of reading for the bar. Indeed, their departure was as much as anything a consequence of the earnest entreaty of their sister, who saw that their presence at home was an exasperation to Sneathy and aggravated her mother's secret sufferings. They went, therefore, but at Ranworth things became worse. Little was allowed to be known outside the house, but it was broadly said that Mr. Sneathy's behavior had become outrageous beyond description. Servants left faster than new ones could be found, and gave their late employer the character of a raving maniac. Once, indeed, he committed himself in the village, attacking with his walking-stick an inoffensive tradesman who had accidentally brushed against him, and immediately running home. This assault had to be compounded for by a payment of fifty pounds. And then Henry and Robert Foster received a most urgent letter from their sister, requesting their immediate presence at home.

They went at once, of course, and the servants' account of what occurred was thus: When the brothers arrived Mr. Sneathy had just left the house. The brothers were shut up with their mother and sister for about a quarter of an hour and then left them and came out to the stable yard together. The coachman (he was a new man, who had only arrived the day before) overheard a little of their talk as they stood by the door. Mr. Henry said that "the thing must be done, and at once. There are two of us, so that it ought to be easy enough." And afterwards Mr. Robert said: "You'll know best how to go about it, you're a doctor." After which Mr. Henry came toward the coachman and asked in what direction Mr. Sneathy had gone. The coachman replied that it was in the direction of Ratherby wood, by the winding footpath that led through it. But as he spoke he distinctly, with the corner of his eye, saw the other brother take a halter from a hook by the stable door and put it into his coat pocket.

So far for the earlier events, whereof I learned later bit by bit. It was on the day of the arrival of the brothers Foster at their old home, and, indeed little more than two hours after the incident last set down, that news of Mr. Sneathy came to Col. Brett's place, where Hewitt and I were sitting and chatting with the colonel. The news was that Mr. Sneathy had committed suicide—had been found hanging, in fact, to a tree in Ratherby wood, just by the side of the footpath.

NO LONGER CHAMPIONS.

Park Club Hour Lose at Whist to the Albanians.

The Albany Whist Club was successful in wresting the whist championship from the Park Club four Saturday evening, and thereby carried with them the silver trophy of the American Whist League.

The game was won by six points, the smallest margin that it has ever been won by any team except the Parks, who gained it by by one point from the Hamiltons of Philadelphia, and four points from the Philadelphians a week later Heretofore the trophy has been secured with scores varying from eight to twenty-one. This fact gives evidence that the Park Club four are whisters who play a close and scientific game all the way through, and can only be beaten with a few points.

In this connection Captain C. L. Smith of the Albanians said: "The Park Club play as strong a game as any team I ever played against, and I have been playing ever since the league was organized." Captain Smith is a director in the league. The Albany players were all greatly pleased with their treatment while here.

The Park Club did not file an immediate challenge, but eventually will do so.

Saturday afternoon was the occasion of a charming tea given by Miss Mabel Ladd and Miss Louise de Goiyer at the home of Miss Mabel Ladd, 20 Willow avenue.

Pink was the prevailing color of the decorations, and in the dining room festoons of pink ribbon fell from the chandelier to the four corners of the table. WHITE AND BLACK.

Prisoners of Varied Hues Line Up in City Court This Morning.

Wm Gilias and James Scowcroft were arraigned in city court this morning on the charge of drunkenness and fighting on East Second street Saturday night.

Gilias first became involved in a quarrel with some unknown man, which finally resulted in their coming to blows. The unknown got enough, and then Scowcroft took a hand in the battle, which culminated in their being arrested by Policeman Frederickson. This morning each paid a fine of $3, and went away to fight no more.

John Scudder got drunk last night. Lots of other men get drunk, too. The queer thing about John's jag was that he accumulated it on Sunday, when the law says that the jag dispensaries must keep closed. But some way or other John got drunk just the same. This morning at 1 he awakened the denizens of Cottage place with a series of yells and other boisterous conduct. John is colored and you know how a colored individual can yell when he feels like it. And John felt just like yelling. So he yelled. Then Policeman Mattox came along and took John to the police station. Judge Coddington fined him $3 or 20 days in jail.

Sentence was suspended in the case of William Connett, a young lad who was arrested for trespassing on the railroad track.

Wanted a Chicken Pie.

Jerry Cash, who resides on South avenue, has some fine chickens. Saturday night he heard a great squeaking among his egg producing tribe, and rushing out to the coop, found a colored man attempting to capture one of his finest roosters.

"Hey, what do you want"—hailed Jerry.

"I wants a rooster, sah"—replied the colored man.

"You do, hey. well you better get out here"—said Jerry in a fierce tone.

The man got.

This morning Jerry wanted a warrant issued for the culprit's arrest, but as he had not stolen the rooster, nothing could be proved against him, so none was issued.

Palm Sunday at Holy Cross.

Palm Sunday was duly observed at the Church of the Holy Cross yesterday. The church was beautifully decorated with palms, and the music was appropriate to the passion of our Lord. For an offertory Miss Georgia Hebert sang "Jerusalem" by Parker, which was very artistically rendered. Miss Hebert is the possessor of a fine contralto voice, and her singing was greatly enjoyed by the large congregation present. The rector, Rev. T. Logan Murphy, preached a stirring and instructive sermon, his subject being the institution of the Lord's Supper after the Pascal feast.

Seantown Their Destination.

The open tournament of the Boston Shooting Association, which will be held at Wellington Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday of this week, will be well attended, as many of the cracks who participated at Paterson will be there. New Jersey will be represented by VanDyke of Dayton, Neaf Apgar, T. H. Keller, Chas. Smith of Plainfield, and Hobart of Newark. Connecticut and Massachusetts have entered strong teams. The shooting will be entirely at artificial targets. The Plainfielders will leave tonight for Boston.

Without Jack? Never!

Through an error the name of John H. Carney was omitted from the published programme of the anniversary entertainment to be given by Paugh-Caugh-Naugh-Sinque Tribe of Red Men Wednesday evening. The "only Jack" is scheduled for one of his famous Dutch dialect stories, with which he always brings down the house.

To Act as Funeral Escort.

The singing section of the Sangerbund society will meet in their hall on Somerset street tomorrow afternoon at 1:30, to attend the funeral of the late Fred Ling at the German Lutheran Church. The society will act as an escort to the remains to the Plainfield avenue cemetery.

Plainfield the Wheelmen's Mecca.

A large number of wheelmen visited Plainfield yesterday on their bicycles from Elizabeth, Bound Brook, Newark, New Brunswick, and various other places in this section of Jersey. Many of them took dinner at McVey's, and from 12 to 2 North avenue was almost lined with their wheels.

Our better halves say they could not keep house without Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. It is used in more than half the homes in Leeds, Sims Bros., Leeds, Iowa. This shows the esteem in which that remedy is held where it has been sold for years and is well known. Mothers have learned that there is nothing so good for colds, croup and whooping cough, that it cures these ailments quickly and permanently, and that it is pleasant and safe for children to take. 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy, Park and North aves. A DANIEL COME TO JUDGMENT.

He Reaps Caustic Criticism on the Proposed New Building Ordinance, and Thinks It Will Keep Home-Builders Out of Plainfield—How Would Mr. Fisk Like Salamander Doors?

TO THE EDITOR OF THE DAILY PRESS:—After a careful perusal of the proposed new building ordinance, I am impelled to the following reflections:

Sec. 1. Under this section an expenditure of even as small an amount as $5 is prohibited, unless the red-tape wheel is pulled vigorously, and a sum fully equal to the cost of improvement is expended in fees to architects and taking of the necessary affidavits. If I wish to erect a bicycle house in my back yard, under this section I would interview the inspector with the following result:

Plans of building—Tracer—Architect—his fee	$5 00
Plans of building—Sun Print to file	1 00
Survey of Location—Transit Surveyor	5 00
Statement of use—Cost of affidavits	50
Total fees, etc	$11 50
Actual cost of building	5 00
	$ 6 50

It will cost $6.50 more in Plainfield than in Westfield.

Again, under this section Mr. Ackerman could not have taken out a partition and in place thereof put in an iron girder, as he has done recently in the residence he bought of Mr. Watson, corner of Park avenue and Seventh street, without first submitting his plans, specifications, etc., to the Inspector, who may be a mechanic, i. e., a blacksmith, (see Sec. 1 of proposed ordidance to create office of Inspector, etc.), notwithstanding the judgment of Mr. Ackerman, and Mr. Marsh, his architect. This is a beautiful provision. If Mr. Ackerman had proceeded under this ordinance, he must do one of two thinds: Decide fully and finally on his addition and alterations in the first instance, and not change his mind afterwards, or else he must visit the inspector's office each time he arrives at a decision to make another change from his original intentions when he started the work. How do you like it?

Sec. 5. This is a corker. My idea has always been that architects determined the thickness of foundation walls by the amount of weight to be carried by the super-structure, but it seems this idea is or should be obsolete. The thickness of wall is hereafter to be determined by height only. Below the grade "good lime and cement mortar mixed with sharp sand" must be used, but above grade you can lay it up dry.

Sec. 6. * * * "approved fire cut-off at each floor." I do not understand exactly what this means, but suppose it to have reference to iron doors at top of each flight of stairs, and other safeguards against fire. I do think that all the safeguards possible should be placed in all places of public resort, but how would Councilman Fisk's house look with salamander doors liberally scattered through it? What do you say to this feature, Mr. Fisk? The clause of this section requiring brick veneering to be not less than 8 inches thick is evidently inspired by some brickmaker. I admit it would be a good thing for his business, but for a legal requirement it is bosh. Think of a stone wall "well bonded" being called a veneer!

Sec. 7. Whoever furnished the inspiration for this section, has a very limited knowledge of covering for roofs. Hereafter the gravel roof is n't in it. The same is true with a good many other good roofs, especially I might mention those made of asbestos in its several forms. Note—Metal roofs are the meanest a fireman has to contend with.

Mr. Editor, the above only refers to buildings outside of fire limits. What a magnificent chance for the real-estate dealers of the towns below us to harp on when the citizen of the great city is looking for a home where he can get pure air and escape the petty annoyances of the great city! How Plainfield will grow! We have only to advertise this ordinance in the New York papers and we will have a great boom.

Some ordnance is made to fire off. I think this part of this one would better have the match applied at once. The balance of this wonderful incubator of good times I may glance at later; but as I am about to build a house (bicycle) I must go down street and engage my architect and surveyor at once, or I will not get it done this Summer. DANIEL.

The Blue Liner Whizzed By.

Constable Robert Mattox had a narrow escape from being struck by a Blue Liner while standing on the track near the Watchung avenue bridge Saturday afternoon. He had just been talking to Engineer Moynihan of the drill engine and did not observe the fast train as it came down the track. His attention was called just in time to get out of the way.

It will be an agreeable surprise to persons subject to attacks of bilious colic to learn that prompt relief may be had by taking Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. In many instances the attack may be prevented by taking this remedy as soon as the first symptoms of the disease appear. 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy, Park and North aves. STOLE A HORSE.

Terrill & Cole Rent a Rig to John Vechte Who Fails to Return.

John Vechte, a man well known in this city, called at Terrill & Cole's livery stable Friday afternoon and hired a horse and buggy, stating that he wished to drive to Westfield. The rig was rented him, and he was expected to return that night. He did not return during the night or morning, and Saturday afternoon the owners of the rig began to surmise that something was wrong. It was finally concluded that Vechte did not intend to return, and Chief Grant was notified of the facts. He immediately had a number of postal cards printed, offering a reward of $50 for the capture of the thief and the return of the horse and wagon, which were sent to police officials throughout the State.

Vechte is described as a man of about 40 years old, 5 feet 9 inches in height, and weighing 265 pounds. He wore a blue overcoat, striped pants and black derby. A distinguishing mark is a brown mustache. The horse was a light gray one, 15 hands high, 8 years old, with a black scar on front shoulder. The buggy was a light side-bar, red running gear, with plate of J. P. Homan on body. Vechte is familiarly known as "Big Jack" and is acquainted in Somerville and Easton, where he was employed as a bartender. He is wanted at Allentown, Pa., for forgery. Chief Grant and George Cole journeyed to Bethlehem yesterday, where he has resided, but could get no trace of him.

THE DEADLY BANANA SKIN.

It Throws a Plainfielder in New York, with Serious Results.

Julius Williams of Elmwood place, a traveling salesman of a large jewelry house in New York, sustained severe injuries Saturday afternoon. He had left the building on Fulton street, at one door, to re-enter it at another. The firm's bookkeeper was with him. While passing along the walk he slipped on a banana skin, and fell down a hatchway, a distance of about fifteen feet. He got a deep cut over his right eye, his face was badly bruised, and his right shoulder and leg were severely sprained. He lost consciousness, and the bookkeep sent for an ambulance, which conveyed him to a hospital. The wounds were dressed, and he was made as comfortable as possible. About 7 in the evening he regained consciousness and a friend assisted him in getting to Plainfield and to his home.

The extent of his injuries was not fully known until yesterday morning, when the family physician, Dr. Boone, was called, and made a thorough examination. Mr. Williams is improving as well as can be expected, though it will be some time before he can resume business.

JUST WHAT IS NEEDED.

At Last Plainfield Is to Have a Hospital Ambulance.

It is expected that an ambulance will be added to the equipment of Muhlenberg Hospital about May 1. The vehicle is being built in New York, and will possess all the latest improvements for hospital service. The cost of construction will be $500, which is to be paid by the Ladies' Auxiliary of the hospital. The wagon will be kept in a livery stable ready to respond at a moment's notice.

Enjoying the Passion Play.

The large and appreciative audience that was present in the Y. M. C. A. Building Saturday evening to witness the lecture on the "Passion Play" given by Professor Richardson of Amherst College, had a rare treat.

The pictures showing the different scenes of this impressive play as given at Ober-Ammergau were exceedingly fine, and the explanatory remarks of Prof. Richardson made the lecture a pleasure and an education.

There were many present not thoroughly acquainted with the details of the play, which is only given every ten years. The personal experience of the Professor, who made a visit to the place in 1880, added much to the realism of the lecture.

J. H. Doane and Walter Freeman assisted Professor Richardson by exhibiting the pictures.

Educating the Youngsters.

Two hundred young children listened attentively to the talk of Mrs. Ellen A. D. Blair of Nebraska, Saturday afternoon in the lecture room of the Crescent Avenue Church. Most of those present were members of the Junior Endeavor societies and the Loyal Temperance Legion. Mrs. Blair's talk concerned the use and ravages to the physical and moral system of alcoholics and narcotics. During the course of her talk she learned that there was no saving banks system in the public schools in Plainfield, and expressed great surprise thereat.

—The Woman's Presbyterial society for foreign missions in the Presbytery of Elizabeth will hold its twenty-fourth annual meeting in the Cranford Presbyterian Church tomorrow, commencing at 10 a. m. A large number of Plainfielders will attend.

A COMING SHOOTER.

George Squiers Won His First Match Against a Crack Gunner.

George W. Squiers of North Plainfield defeated Wm. Ross of Elizabeth Saturday, in their match shoot of 50 birds for $100 a side. The event came off on the grounds of the Elizabeth Gun Club, and was attended by a large number of the sporting fraternity from all over the State.

This was Squiers's first match shoot, and the defeat of Ross, who is considered one of the crack amateurs, by a score of 39 to 38, is a distinct victory for the Plainfielder. The outcome of the match was a big surprise to the gunners, for several hundred dollars changed hands on the result, the wagers being $10 to $8 in favor of the defeated man. Squiers won in the first half by a score of 21 to 20, as in the last half the contestants broke even on a record of 18 out of the 25 birds.

Squiers drew an exceedingly hard lot of birds, a heavy wind making a great portion of them drivers and twisters, besides several right quarter incomers. Thomas H. Keller was referee and Dan Terry puller.

The score was:

A sweepstakes followed of 7 birds, with $5 entrance fee. Squiers, Neaf Apgar and Keller were tied, and divided the purse.

COMPLAINT WELL FOUNDED.

The Existing Dog Nuisance Is a Great Discouragement to Those Who Try to Beautify the Town.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE DAILY PRESS:—Will it be worth while to make our Spring garden this year, in view of the hundreds of throughbred curs which infest our streets and destroy lawns and gardens, at their pleasure, quite regardless of the fact of the hundreds of dollars expended on the same (gardens, etc., be it understood, as in not one case in a hundred are the dogs worth a dollar each in the rating of a fancier). The owners, if the dogs have any, seem to think that this beautiful city of Plainfield must afford entertainment and protection to this great nuisance. Lawns are destroyed, chickens are killed, gardens are not possible under the existing dog privileges. And now I wish to ask in all seriousness, Has the taxpaying property-owner any rights whatever? HOUSEHOLDER.

The Story of the Cross.

The service at the First Baptist Church last evening was a delightful one. Under the very capable direction of Organist E. J. Fitzhugh, the large choir rendered Dudley Buck's cantata "The Story of the Cross". The composition is a beautiful one, and the well trained voices brought out in detail all the fine points of the work. The solo parts were exceedingly well taken by Miss F. May Grant and Wm. Holmes, and the duets by Miss Grant and Miss Nancy Randolph. The quartette selection by Miss Grant, Miss Randolph, Mr. Smith and Wm. Holmes was very much enjoyed.

The entire work of the chorus was particularly fine, and the very large congregation thoroughly appreciated the rendition of the work.

Rev. Dr. Yerkes, at the close, gave a short and very interesting talk on the subject of the cantata.

Those who composed the choir were:

Sopranos—Miss F. May Grant, Miss Bessie Blair, Miss Swain, Mrs. Harold Serrell, Miss Spear, Mrs. Roe, and Miss Emma Case.

Altos—Miss Guesie Runyon, Miss Nancy Randolph, Miss Florence Kline, Miss Bertha Needham, Miss Overton, Miss Bonny.

Tenors—C. W. McCuethen, A. S. Roe, Mr. Smith, and Mr. Douglass.

Bassos—William Holmes, B. T. Barnes, Mr. Gilbert, Stacy Raynolds, and George Snedicker.

UNCLE SAM'S FINANCES

Expenditures Exceed Receipts $150,000 a Day.

A Deficit of $55,000,000 Expected at the Close of the Fiscal Year—Economy Practiced Now to the Utmost—Where the Treasury Department Looks for Aid.

Washington, April 8.—From the last daily statement issued by the treasury department it appears that the expenditures for the current fiscal year to date, of 280 days, have exceeded the receipts $42,299,490, the totals standing: Expenditures, $284,392,686; receipts, $242,093,195.

$150,000 a Day Behind.

These figures which embody more than three-fourths of the fiscal year, show that the receipts are running at the rate of $865,000 a day, and the expenditures at the rate of $1,015,000 a day. If the same ratio obtains for the balance of the fiscal year, the accounts would stand: Expenditures, $370,475,000; receipts, $315,725,000.

No More Economy Possible.

This would leave an excess of expenditure over receipts of $55,000,000. The expenditures are pared down to the lowest limit of economy consistent with fixed appropriations made by law, and are likely to be increased rather than diminished.

Causes of the Deficiency.

The increases in the fiscal year have arisen from two principal sources, viz: Appropriations by the last congress made immediately available and the quarterly interest payments on the $165,000,000 of United States bonds issued within fourteen months to protect and strengthen the treasury gold reserve.

Must Look for Increased Receipts.

It is to increased receipts that the treasury must turn to bring the treasury receipts and expenditures closer together and bear out the estimate laid before congress which claimed that at the end of the fiscal year the deficiency (which is now $42,000,000) will then be only $20,000,000.

Hope from Reviving Trade.

Import statistics Saturday made public by the bureau of statistics hold out a hope that the increased revenues from sugar duties may come up to the estimates. Indications of a general revival in commercial prosperity are also pointed to as promising equally satisfactory results from other sources of revenue. The question as to what amount of money will or will not be derived from the income tax seems to be the only important doubtful factor.

SIGNS OF IMPROVING TIMES.

Postoffice Department Report a Large Increase in Sale of Stamps.

Washington, April 8.—The auditor's division of the postoffice department has just completed the settlement of accounts of postoffices for the last quarter of the calendar year, 1894, and the figures, as compared with those of the same quarter of 1893, are viewed with much satisfaction by the officials. The volume of business transacted by the postal service has long been considered a reliable index of the condition of trade and commerce of the country.

On the Upward Grade.

When the recent panic began to effect the business interests of the country that fact was at once shown in reduced receipts at the postoffices. Now, that the figures show an increase, the officials feel justified in arguing that the bottom has been touched and the country is on the upward grade.

Largest Sum Ever Received.

The sale of stamps for the quarter was $19,405,571. This is said to be the largest sum ever received from that source within the same period in the history of the postal service. The receipts for the last quarter of 1893 were $18,199,729.

Speaks with Considerable Warmth About Dr. Lansing's Charges.

Washington, April 8.—When the report of a speech made in a Methodist conference at Salem, Mass., by the Rev. Dr. Lansing and a subsequently published interview with the same gentleman, accusing the president of intemperance, was shown to President Cleveland last evening, he said with considerable warmth: "This is simply an outrage. Though it is not the first time a similar thing has been attempted I cannot avoid a feeling of indignation that any man who makes any claim to decency, and especially one who assumes the role of a Christian minister, should permit himself to become a disseminator of wholesale lies and calumnies not less stupid than they are cruel and wicked. For the sake of the Christian religion I am thankful that these scandal mongering ministers are few, and on every account I am glad that the American people love fair play and justice, and that in spite of all efforts to mislead them they are apt to form a correct estimate of the character and labors of their public servants."

Modesto Barrios sailed Saturday for Corinto. In an interview he said he did not doubt the report that the British would land troops on Nicaraguan territory. THE PEOPLE'S CHURCH

Rev. Thomas Dixon's New Venture Launched.

The Idea Is To Unify All Churches in the Service of God, Dr. Dixon Says—No Triumphant Christianity Without a Unified Worship of the Deity—Many Sects and In-sects.

New York, April 8.—The People's Church, with the Rev. Thomas Dixon at its head, was launched yesterday, when the first service—that for the admission of members—was held at the Academy of Music. When the regular service began there were fully 3,500 people in the hall. "The Call for Christian Unity" was the subject of Mr. Dixon's sermon, and, in the course of his remarks, he said:

Sects and In-sects.

"There are already many sects—some large and powerful, and some so small that they deserve to be called 'in-sects.' The idea of the new church is to unify all the churches in the service of God. There can be no triumphant Christianity unless there is a unified worship of the Deity."

The Creed of Life.

In concluding Mr. Dixon said: "I believe in the creed of life, and we will never reach Christian unity in our churches until our churches are formed on that creed. We all entered the world through pain and suffering and vicarious love, and we should all love one another, each worshipping God as he sees fit, and seeing to it that his own life is pure and copied after the life of the Saviour. I believe in the living Church."

To Complete the Organization.

There will be a meeting in the Academy on Sunday next at 10 o'clock, when a committee will be appointed by the pastor to report the by-laws of the new church. A board of trustees and deacons will also be appointed.

SYDNEY GURNDY COMPLAINS.

He Asks by What Right Is Wilde's Name Blotted from His Work.

London, April 8.—Sydney Grundy, the dramatist, has written the Daily Telegraph a letter regarding the removal of Oscar Wilde's name from the programme of his plays. THAT NEW WAR CLOUD

Norway-Sweden Clash May Involve Germany.

The Kaiser Will Not Permit the Interference of Russia—Will Take Up Arms if Necessary—Coolness in the Relations Between Berlin and St. Petersburg.

Berlin, April 8.—The maturing conflict between Norway and Sweden has given rise to strange reports in Berlin. Since Tuesday it has been a common statement that, should the two kingdoms resort to force, Emperor William would take up arms rather than permit the threatened interference of Russia. He is said to have promised King Oscar as much.

Situation Very Serious.

Yesterday's dispatches from Stockholm, while not confirming the predictions of war, describe the situation as very serious. Since King Oscar returned to Stockholm negotiations have been resumed in Christiania between Michelet of the conservative right, Minister Stang and the liberal leader Steen, but with little prospect of success as Stang insists upon his resignation. Michelet admits that he cannot form a ministry with any hopes of governing under the constitution and Steen threatens to impeach the members of any cabinet trying to override the majority.

Less Friendly Than Before.

With the alarmist rumors of the emperor's promise to King Oscar has come a batch of gossip as to the relations between St. Petersburg and Berlin. The two courts are supposed to be less friendly now than a few weeks ago. The Tageblatt says the czar gave Emperor William no advance information as to Prince Lobanoff's appointment to the ministry of foreign affairs. Although the prince at the time was ambassador-elect to Germany, the German emperor first learned the news from Emperor Franz Joseph.

The Kaiser Chagrined.

The Tageblatt says Emperor William was so chagrined by this snub that he at once recalled General von Werder, whose business it was to learn the change of plan in St. Petersburg. The statement that the czar and czarina will not come to Berlin this year is regarded as additional proof of the estrangement, although, as the czarina's accounchment is expected to take place early in September, it is difficult to see how the visit could be made even if Russia and Germany were on the verge of an alliance.

Randolin Appointed Out of Spite.

Prince Randolin's appointment to succeed Werder is said to have been made out of spite. Randolin is an enthusiastic Pole and once advocated Polish autonomy openly. Such a character is not adapted to please the Russian official circle, although as a diplomatist of the first rank Randolin may be able to make a place for himself at the Russian court.

GEN. MAHONE NOT INSOLVENT.

In Need of Ready Money, But He Has Abundant Real Estate.

Richmond, Va., April 8.—Judge Edmund Waddill, the trustee named in the deed of General Mahone, recorded in Petersbug, explains that General Mahone wanted to secure certain debts he owed in preference to others he considered that he did not owe, and for which he was being sued or suits were threatened. Judge Waddill says he does not consider General Mahone insolvent by any means. Like many others, he is somewhat in need of ready money. Still his property, Mr. Waddill says, is very valuable, and his real estate in the city of Washington alone, at even half its value, would sell for enough to pay every possible liability against him, and leave him in comfortable circumstances.

A Day of Mourning at Batavia.

Batavia, N. Y., April 8.—The funeral of Mary E. Richmond, widow of Dean Richmond, will be held to-morrow afternoon. The day will be one of mourning in Batavia, and all business places will be closed during the hour of the funeral. Postmaster Hall has wired the department for permission to close the postoffice Tuesday afternoon.

Thanked by the Kaiser.

Berlin, April 8.—Emperor William has sent this telegram to Captain Barends of the steamship Normannia, which rescued the crew of the British steamship Arno in mid-ocean: "I express to you my full appreciation of the rescue of the crew of the English vessel Arno, so happily accomplished with persevering courage under arduous circumstances."

Mormons Working Abroad.

Berlin, April 8.—Despite the repeated expulsion of Mormon missionaries and the strictest police surveilance in Brandenburg, their favorit field, the work of proselyting goes on without interruption. Several women started from Hamburg last week for Utah, and more will sail before May.

Teachers To Call on Bismarck.

Friedrichsruhe, April 8.—Prince Bismarck has had a rest from public receptions, but will resume work to-day when the teachers of the Prussian high schools will come to Friedrichsruhe to present a statuette of Emperor William I. The figure is worked out in silver and gold.

To Repeal Questionable Ordinances.

Chicago, April 8.—Alderman Mann will attempt at the meeting of the new city council this evening to have repealed the Ogden gas, the Cosmopolitan electric and the Commercial heat and power ordinances which were recently passed, it is alleged, by questionable means.

Death of an Old Ship Master.

Provincetown, Mass., April 8.—Captain Samuel Rich, aged 88 years, died yesterday. He was the oldest vessel master in town. In 1837 he brought the first trip of mackerel ever brought from Bay St. Lawrence.

Not To Offend Russia.

Berlin, April 8.—On Thursday Bismarck gave an interview to Premier Stolloff of Bulgaria. He is reported as advising Stolloff not to offend Russia.

Death of an Old Nebraskan.

Tekama, Neb., April 8.—John Wallace, one of the oldest residents of Nebraska, and an uncle of General Lew Wallace, is dead.

GOV. CLARKE ARRESTED.

He Spat in Representative Jones' Face and Drew a Revolver.

Little Rock, Ark., April 8.—Governor James P. Clarke and Representative W. R. Jones, of Marion county, had an altercation in the lobby of Gleason's hotel yesterday afternoon, which came near resulting in a serious affair. Saturday when the charges of bribery were made in the house of representatives against certain members in connection with the railroad commission bill, Mr. Jones rose to a question of privilege and stated that Governor Clarke was responsible for the charges; that he had gone about in the dark, like an assassin with a knife up his sleeve, stabbing in the back men who were his peers in every respect. About 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon Governor Clarke called at Gleason's hotel where he met Jones in the lobby. He requested a private interview with Jones in order that he might have an understanding with him. Jones replied that he would go nowhere with him, and that if he had any business with him he could transact it where they were. This angered the governor and he spat in Jones' face. Jones spat back at the governor, who drew a large pistol but was prevented from shooting by several bystanders. Clarke was arrested by a constable, but was released on his own recognizance. The governor will plead guilty to-day in a justice's court to assault.

CRUSHED HER HEAD TO A MASS.

Brutal Wife Murder in a Pennsylvania Mining Village.

Pittston, Pa., April 8.—A brutal wife murder was commtted on Thursday night at Hamtown, a mining village near here, and was only discovered yesterday. George Windschik crushed his wife's skull to a shapeless mass, then made his escape. The prolonged absence of both man and wife aroused curiosity on the part of the neighbors, who yesterday broke into the house, where they found three small children of the murderer, who had supposed that their father and mother had gone away on a visit. On going up stairs they found a bedroom door locked, which, however, was soon opened and entered. On the floor they discovered the body of Mrs. Windschik lying in a pool of blood, and from all indications there had been a fearful struggle for life, as the woman had been stabbed in many places with a chisel and then clubbed to death. The murderer, it is believed, went to New York, where he took passage on one of the outgoing steamers.

KILLED WIFE, THEN HIMSELF.

A Horrible Double Tragedy in Front of a Church.

Wichita, Kan., April 8.—A horrible tragedy occurred on the steps of the Lincoln street Christian church, as the congregation was walking out of the church after the services were over, about noon yesterday. On the sidewalk in front of the church, Walter Scott fired a bullet into the brain of his wife as she came out on the arm of her father and she fell at his feet a corpse. Scott placed the muzzle of the revolver in his mouth and sent a bullet crashing into his brain and fell dead almost within reach of his wife's arm. Before shooting his wife he asked her if she would not return to his home.

NORTHAMPTON'S BIG BLAZE.

Oliver Walker's Block on Main Street Was Gutted.

Northampton, Mass., April 8.—Oliver Walker's block on Main street, in this city, was gutted by fire last night. At the start it was feared that other property would catch; by hard work the department kept it under control, and by midnight the fire was under control. The loss is heavy, and while its exact extent is not known it is believed it will reach fully $100,000.

Pilgrims in Danger of Cholera.

London, April 8.—A dispatch from Vienna says that the Politische Correspondez states that cholera has broken out in the lazaretto, on the island of Kamaran, off the west coast of Arabia, in a bay of the Red sea. Thirty persons have been attacked, and there are several deaths daily.

Dr. Parkhurst's Sermons.

New York, April 8.—Dr. Parkhust, in his sermon in the Madison square Presbyterian church yesterday, confined himself to a doctrinal line, and did not, as it was supposed he would, refer to the indictment of the park commissioners and police Captain Killilea by the extraordinary grand jury.

Had No Account in New York.

Wilkesbarre, Pa., April 8.—A well dressed young man, giving the name of Thomas Shaw and claiming to be a lawyer from New York, is under arrest here on a charge of fraud. On Friday last he went to the Wyoming National bank and received $25 on a worthless New York draft.

Nelly Bly To Marry.

Chicago, April 8.—Marriage license has been issued to Robert Seaman and Elizabeth Cochrane (Nelly Bly). Mr. Seaman is a New York lawyer and his age, according to the records in the county clerk's office, is 68 years. Miss Cochrane's is specified as "legal."

Wants To Be an Irish Nationalist.

London, April 8.—John Sweetman, anti-Parnellite M. P. for the east division of Wicklow, has resigned his seat. He requests his constituents to re-elect him as an Irish nationalist, independent of all English parties.

Mormon Church Conference.

Salt Lake, Utah, April 8.—The 65th annual conference of the Mormon church came to a conclusion yesterday. It is estimated that 20,000 attended the afternoon services. Delegates were present from all parts of the world.

Hail Storms in Georgia.

Athens, Ga., April 8.—This section of Georgia was visited by two destructive hail storms within the past twenty-four hours. Hail stones as big as hen's eggs descended and wrought great damage to fruit and garden plants.

To Permanently Occupy Adowa.

Rome, April 8.—Gen. Baratieri, the commander of the Italian forces in eastern Africa, insists upon the permanent occupation of Adowa, which he entered a few days ago, as well as other towns in the Tigre region.

Mr. Mansur May Recover.

Washington, April 8.—A change for the better has taken place in the case of Hon. C. H. Mansur, and this morning his physicians said there was a chance for his recovery.

SPAIN IS ALARMED

The Gravity of the Situation in Cuba Recognized.

No Disguising the Fact of the Rapid Spread of the Revolution—Government Troops Landed Have Accomplished Little, if Anything—Everything Favoring the Rebels.

Madrid, April 8.—There is no doubt in the minds of those close to the government that the situation in Cuba is considered of the gravest concern by the officials and there is a strong feeling of alarm as to the final outcome. That the revolution is spreading and at a dangerous rate, too, there is no denying. The troops sent from Spain have done nothing, unless, perhaps to temporarily retard the growth of the revolt.

All in the Rebels Favor.

It is generally believed that General Martinez Campos will not be able to commence operations before September. He will arrive in Cuba in May, but he cannot complete the necessary preparations before June, at which date begins the rainy season, which will put a stop to military operations for a period of three months. Meanwhile, the insurgents will have plenty of opportunity to prepare their grounds and even to proclaim a provisional government.

The Situation Serious.

If a provisional government is recognized by any American government a most serious blow will have been struck at the Spanish rule in Cuba. The domestic troubles of the Spanish government likewise are great, and for twenty years past Spain has not found herself face to face with a position of such difficulty as the present.

Consul Williams Will Resign.

Havana, Cuba, April 8.—Consul General Williams is preparing his resignation on account of his difficulties with the Spanish government. The consul's resignation is the outcome of a long series of misunderstandings with the government. It is understood here that Secretary Gresham upbraided the consul for his outspoken ways. This has rankled in the consul's mind, and his resignation follows, because he is tired of the affair.

The Revolt Spreading.

Santiago de Cuba, April 8.—The revolution spreads every day. About twenty persons disappear every night to join the insurgents in the field. Bands of insurgents are within two miles of the city. The government has no troops on hand with which to control the situation, and has not taken any vigorous measures for fear of having the majority of the inhabitants join the rebels.

Gomez Will Be Shot.

New York, April 8.—A special from Key West, Fla., says: It is rumored here that Julio Sanguilly will be sent from Havana to Spain on April 15 and released there. It is also said that Juan Gualberto Gomez will be started for Matanzas and shot on the way, ostensibly while he is trying to escape.

CHINESE WERE INSOLENT.

Li Hung Moved to Sorrow by His Countrymen's Actions.

Loudon, April 8.—The Central News correspondent in Tokio says that the stories apout the killing of the wounded at the battle of Tien-Chwang emenated exclusively from Chinese sources. The Japanese maintain that the wounded were treated by them with the customary humanity. Letters written by three reporters from the headquarters of the three divisions in Maochuria support this denial in every respect.

The Chinese Governor Was Insolent.

Lieut. Gen. Fodzu reported from Hai-Cheng on April 4 that Gen. Yi had sent him a message to the effect that the Chinese commanders knew nothing of the conclusion of an armistice. Moreover, the governor of Liao-Yang answered the notice of the armistice with an insolent letter denying that he had been informed of the arrangement. When Li Hung Chang was told of the replies sent by Yi and the governor he expressed deep regret.

Ignorant of Civilized Customs.

It is supposed that telegraphic communication with the Chinese forces has been interrupted. Mounted couriers could not have got from Pekin to Gen. Yi's headquarters in fewer than five days, and, although sent, they probably had not arrived when the Japanese messengers went into the Chinese camp. The Tartar soldiers, moreover, are utterly ignorant of the civilized customs of war and have no understanding for a truce.

Wanted To Fight Japan in 1882.

The Central News correspondent in Tokio says that Lord Li has been appointed envoy with full powers to Japan, and has formally accepted the mission. The Tien-Tsin correspondent tells of the discovery of a secret memorial, dated 1882, in which many high Chinese officials had recorded their unanimous opinion that China should undertake the conquest of Japan, since the progress of western civilization among the Japanese was threatening the welfare of the Chiness people.

Miss Wickes's Stage Debut.

Memphis, Tenn., April 8.—Miss Florence Lillian Wiekes, youngest daughter of the vice-president of the Pullman Palace Car company of Chicago, made her debut on the professional stage Saturday evening at the Lyceum theatre, appearing in "The Sign of the Cross," with the company of Wilson Barrett.

Ladies of the Maccabees.

Buffalo, April 8.—The state hive of the ladies of the Maccabees was organized here and a full corps of officers elected at a convention which has just closed its labors in this city. There are now in the state of New York 200 hives with a membership of nearly 10,000 women.

Balfour Sails for England.

MET A 'GATOR GOING TO A PARTY.

An Unexpected Use for a Florida Negro's Razor and Revolver.

It is impossible to know just what feeling the alligator entertains toward the negro, but the feeling of the negro toward the alligator is not akin to love. When a colored man sees an alligator his blood boils and the alligator must look out for himself. At certain seasons, when the alligators are mating, the males go across country from one body of water to another, and it is not uncommon to come across them during such migrations. When alligators are near water and are surprised by the approach of a man they will run for the water, and run fast, too; but when surprised inland they simply play 'possum and many are killed at such times.

A colored man takes particular delight when he has a chance to make away with an alligator, and will leave his work or stop on his way to a camp meeting for the purpose. In the recent cold snap, when the water in the pond was covered with about an inch of ice, an alligator was unfortunate enough to be caught at an unusual disadvantage. It was a very large alligator, with moss on his chin for whiskers, and he had been lying in a deep part of a wide shallow stream just where a road crossed. Persons traveling the road with horses forded the stream, and for those afoot trees had been felled and made into a kind of foot bridge. The alligator was not less than twelve feet long. When the cold came and with it the ice, the alligator became benumbed. He was in full view when a colored man walked across the fallen trees.

The man was dressed up in his best. He had on a white shirt, a high collar, shiny shoes and everything to match, and was in a hurry to get to a neighbor's where there was to be a dance. He had taken the precaution of bringing along a pistol and a razor.

It was about 2 o'clock P. M. when he saw the alligator lying under the ice just a few yards from the crossing place. The party was for the time forgotten. He knew the alligator would be benumbed and at a disadvantage. With a stick he broke the ice over the alligator's head and fired a couple of shots, both of which were effective. The big alligator waggled up and made a move toward the darky, who by this time was wading in the shallow water, shiny shoes and all. The revolver was emptied, every shot taking effect, and with five 32-calibre bullets in his head the alligator did not cut much of a figure in the fight, and became quiet as if dying.

The man had his fighting blood up and he knew that it was hard to kill an alligator. He threw off his coat and began pounding the alligator's head with a big club. After pounding like a wild man for a few minutes the man took a rest. The alligator showing no signs of fighting, or, in fact, of life, the colored man dragged him out of the water and by means of the razor almost severed the head from the body. He then jammed a big stick into the alligator's mouth. Then the darky with wet feet, his natty appearance ruined by dirt and water, gathered up his coat and hat and continued his journey to the party. The writer witnessed the whole performance, and never saw a man work harder and with more determination. The darky had met an enemy, it seemed, and he certainly got away with him.

Cooks Who Won't Eat Their Own Dishes.

The fact that cooks rarely have much appetite for the food of their own preparing is illustrated nightly at a well known New York uptown chop house. There may be found the chef and several of the assistant chefs of one of the first hotels in New York. These men can have anything they want from the kitchens in which they are employed free of cost. The greatest luxuries of the market are at their disposal, and furthermore they know that everything is beyond reproach. The kitchens are supplied with all the latest improvements, and are so clean and appetizing that visitors are taken through them. As for the cooking, the fact that many of the best known gourmets of the city have forsaken their old resorts for this one is ample recommendation. Yet the men who are responsible for all this go nightly to a simple chop house where they have to pay the same as other customers for their suppers. The chef gave this explanation:

"When one is constantly surrounded by food stuffs he gets tired of the sight of them. It is so with any other business. It is all right while you are at it, but when your work is done you want to get away from it. We come here to forget our work and to eat things we have not seen or handled."

A Narrow Escape.

The reverend doctor is a "little round, fat, oily man of God," but he is blessed with a brain and a laugh far greater than most men, and he never hesitates to tell a joke, even though it "be one on him." The last time he met the Saunterer he had been having trouble with the steam boiler of his house, and had sent for a plumber to locate the difficulty.

"The plumber came," said the doctor, "and proved to be a burly Irishman, twinkling all over from the sole of his feet to the top of his carrot pate. I sent him downstairs and in my study, just over the boiler, by the way, awaited the result of his investigations. In about ten minutes he reappeared, looking somewhat disturbed.

"'Is this the place where ye sits and wroites?' said he.

"'It is,' said I.

"'Then,' said he, 'ye may thank God ye wasn't blown to hell.'

"And," concluded the doctor, "I told him I agreed with him in more ways than one."—Boston Budget.

$40 in the Lining of His Coat.

Mr. Conover of South Plainfield came to Plainfield Friday on business. He had nearly $40 with him, and after transacting his business he looked for the money and it was missing.

He at first thought that he had been robbed, but could not imagine by whom. Mr. Conover went for his horse and wagon and hurried home as quickly as possible to tell his wife. But the money could not be found. He went into the field to work, but the matter troubled him a great deal.

Mrs. Conover finally picked up his overcoat and found that in one of the pockets there was a hole and the pocketbook had dropped through to the bottom of the coat. There was general rejoicing when the money was found, which had not been disturbed.

A Novelty in Hymn Selection.

The First Presbyterian Church was thronged with people last evening, the occasion being a special musical service. For some time past the members of the congregation have been voting on the hymns they considered to be the most popular, and from the list eleven were selected at the service last evening

Rev. C. E. Herring then spoke briefly on each, telling something of the author and the circumstances connected with the writing.

There were 550 hymns selected; of these "Just as I Am", and "Lead, Kindly Light", received the highest number of votes, 19. The other nine following were: "Abide With Me"; "How Firm a Foundation"; "My Jesus as Thou Wilt"; "The Sweetest Name"; Jesus, Lover of My Soul"; "Rock of Ages"; "Nearer my God to Thee"; "Am I a Soldier of the Cross"; "Jerusalem, the Golden".

ASH BARREL JIMMY.

THE FIRST SALVATION ARMY CONVERT IN AMERICA IS DEAD.

His Eventful Career. By Turn a Loafer, Drunkard, Thief and Garroter. In Humble Glory Jimmy Used to March Forth as the Standard Bearer.

"Ash Barrel Jimmy," the Salvation Army's first convert in America, died recently in Boston. He got his name in New York in this way:

One Saturday afternoon in 1880 he started to Harry Hill's place to see what sort of show the Salvation Army was. He learned at the door that an admission fee was charged. That turned him back, and toward night he drifted into a Water street dive. A gang of toughts painted his face and coat black, rolled him in the sawdust on the floor and then kicked him out.

He was staggering along, when the wind whisked off his cap, landing it in an ash barrel at the curbstone. Jimmy leaned over and reached down for his cap, but lost his balance and fell into the barrel. He tugged and kicked, but was held fast, head downward. A policeman saw his legs and then recognized Jimmy's voice.

The officer clubbed the soles of the man's feet to sober him—a common method still in vogue.

"I'm sober!" howled Jimmy, "but the nails have got me."

Another policeman came up. Then a policeman took hold of each leg while somebody held the barrel, but the man could not be pulled out, and meanwhile he was almost suffocated by the ashes. He was a tight fit in there, and the crooked points of the nails, fastened in his ragged clothes, gripped him securely. His shoes were pulled off his feet in the vain effort to extricate him.

There was nothing to do but to carry the barrel, with Jimmy in it, under arrest, to the Oak street station. The policemen dragged him along by the legs, the barrel jolting over cobblestones. Jimmy's eyes and mouth and ears were filled with ashes. This didn't kill the man, but it broke the barrel—or started it to breaking, and the policemen completed the demolition with there clubs, and the prisoner was uncased in some wise like a chicken might be get out of an egg by breaking the shell.

A wreck scarcely to be recognized as human, a ragged, bushy headed and barefooted thing, smeared with paint, sawdust, ashes, mud and blood, he was arraigned in court the next morning. He told the Judge that he had started to the Salvation Army. It occurred to His Honor, probably in a humorous way, that this was a fair specimen for the Army, then a very new and promising experiment in New York.

"Will you go there and behave yourself if I let you go?" the defendant was asked.

"Shure," said Jimmy.

He was discharged upon that promise. A few hours later he was drunk again, but he kept the pledge in mind, and went that afternoon to the Army hall in Baxter street. He was interested and they prayed over him there, but he wasn't converted.

He promised that he would go that night to an Army meeting to be held in Hudson River Hall, 28th street and 9th avenue. Jimmy started, taking a street car. He had no money to pay fare and was thrown off the car. He was picked up by a bartender, who gave him a drink of brandy.

"Thanks," said Jimmy, "I feel strong enough to go on now."

"Go where?"

"To the Salvation Army.

At the door of the hall where the meeting was about to begin he was stopped by a policeman, who said:

"They don't want the likes o' you in there. Get away!"

"I'm invited," said Jimmy.

"Get out, I tell yer."

"I'm invited, I tell yer."

The policeman struck the man with his club. Just then Commissioner Railton ran out and recognized Jimmy.

"I knowed you didn't want cattle like that," said the policeman, making ready to use his club again.

"They're the very people we do want," said Railton, leading the sot inside.

Then and there Jimmy's faith, directly in the Salvation Army and indirectly in what the Salvation Army represented, was born. It was largely a matter of kindness on one hand and gratitude on the other. The man was converted at that meeting.

Very few people, even in the Salvation Army, knew that "Ash Barrel Jimmy's" name was James Kemp.

He had been a convict, and was one of the most notorious toughs on the lower east side of New York for many years.

James Kemp, according to a sketch of his life written by Captain Lyons and published in the War Cry in April, 1893, was born in Halesworth, County Norfolk, England, over sixty years ago. His father died when Jimmy was six years old; his mother died a year later. At the age of ten the lad was arrested for drunkenness—his first arrest. He got ten days in prison.

A Fair Proposition.

Marshal Lefebvre, created Duke of Dantzic by Napoleon the First for his services in battle, was called upon one day by an old comrade who had not succeeded in the world. He seemed very envious of his friend's riches and beautiful house, and made unkind remarks about them to the marshal.

"Well, now," said Lefebvre, at last, "you shall have it all, but at cost price. We will go down into the garden; I will fire at you sixty times; and then, if you are not killed, everything shall be yours."—San Francisco Argonaut.

THE EGOTISM OF PROFESSIONALS.

A Nameless Poet Meets His Match in Two Harvard Students.

A story which, if it be not absolutely true, is at any rate sufficiently characteristic to be considered ben trovato, is now going the round of the clubs at the expense of a well known poet and critic, who is not so hypercritical as to be unable to appreciate his own distinguished services to literature. It appears that the poet, in the company of Mr. H. C. Bunner, Mr. Laurence Hutton and Mr. Frank Stockton, having visited the play, dropped in at Delmonico's for a light repast. The only tables left unoccupied in the cafe were those intended for two persons; but the poet observed that two young men were seated at one of the tables meant for four, and going up to them he asked whether they would be willing to take one of the smaller tables and let him and his friends have theirs, a request to which they very politely acceded.

From the casual remarks dropped by the two young men during the next half hour and overheard by the parte carree it was discovered that they were Harvard undergraduates down from Cambridge for a day or two. Coffee and cigars having now been reached, the poet in the goodness of his heart, and having in mind the courtesy of the young men, thought to himself what a kindly act it would be to let them know how distinguished a group they had accommodated. It would be an experience memorable in their life history, something to tell their grandchildren about in after years. So going over to the contiguous table he invited the amiable youths to join his party and finish their coffee in his company.

"And it gives me great pleasure to introduce ourselves," he remarked in his most genial manner. "I am Mr. So-and-So, and this is my friend, Mr. Bunner, the editor of 'Puck.' This is Mr. Laurence Hutton, and this is Mr. Frank Stockton."

A faint and inscrutable smile stole over the faces of the ingenuous youths. Then one of them slapped the poet on the back.

"My dear fellow," he said, "so glad to know you all. And it gives me great pleasure to make ourselves known to you. I myself am Kaiser Wilhelm; and this," touching his companion lightly with a cheese stick—"this is my friend, Fuerst Bismarck!"—New York Mail and Express.

STAGE FRIGHT IN SPEAKERS.

A Vermont Governor Who Was Always More at Ease Outside His Own State.

There are some speakers who never experience the least bit of trepidation before an audience, buf from what I can learn this is the exception rather than the rule. A gentleman who has charmed many a Vermont audience by his mellifluous words informed me that he was frightened for the first time in his life while speaking after the witty and brilliant Depew at the recent banquet in Burlington. This is not to be wondered at, and I noticed that even the ready and self-possessed toastmaster appeared at his best after the chief orator had left the hall.

One of the best known governors that the Green Mountain State has had in late years told me recently that it bothered him somewhat to think that he could never get over being embarrassed when he addressed an audience. When he went out of the State to speak he said that he was more at ease, being in the presence of strangers, but when he appeared before an assemblage of Vermonters, many of whom he knew and who knew him, he spoke not without considerable trepidation.

His experience in this direction led him at one time to congratulate ex-Senator George F. Edmunds on the fact that the latter had appeared in public so much that he was perfectly at home when addressing an audience, but the congratulator was astonished to hear Mr. Edmund's reply: "You are mistaken. I never rise to my feet to speak without feeling more or less uncomfortable."—Burlington (Vt.) Free Press.

THEY CHEERED WELLINGTON.

He Whipped the French, but Did It Like a Gentleman.

While Wellington was still a marquis he went to Paris from Toulouse, where he had fought and won the last battle of the Peninsula war.

He went to the opera the same evening, and though he wore plain clothes and sat in the back of the box he was almost immediately recognized by some one in the pit, who cried out, "Vellington!"

The name was taken up by others, and at last the entire pit rose, turned to the box and called, "Vive Vellington!"

Nor would the people be satisfied until he had stood up and bowed to them, when he was cheered and applauded again. At the end of the performance the passage from the box was found to be crowded with people. The ladies of the party drew back nervously, but the duke said, "Come along!" in his brusque way, and conducted them on. While they were still in the corridor a man in the crowd was heard to say to his companions:

"But why are you applauding so much? He has always beaten us!"

This was very true, and the question seemed a natural one; but the answer was charming:

"Yes, but he has always beaten us like a gentleman!"—Harrison's Monthly.

Practical Dog Training.

A way of training a dog to answer its master's call has been adopted by Head Keeper Manley, of the Zoological Gardens, which, while it may not be entirely new, is certainly effective. He possesses a valuable dog whose only fault was that of independence, and, whistle and call as much as he might, the dog refused to take the slightest notice. One day Mr. Manley caught the dog in his cellar and tied a clothesline about its body just behind its forelegs. The line was several yards long, and, with a tight hold on his end, Manley took the dog out for a walk. Every once in a while he would whistle, and when the dog failed to respond he threw in the rope hand over hand with the startled animal turning a succession of somersaults in the dirt. A few such lessons were enough, and the dog is now a model of obedience.—Philadelphia Record.

Carefulness About Little Things.

"I think it's all right for a bank President with a salary of $40,000 a year to spend half a day looking for a lost penny," said Mr. Billtops. "It wouldn't do for a man in his place to set the bad example of being careless about little things, but when Mrs. Billtops spoils a two dollar pair of gloves trying to pick up a penny, it always kind of irritates me."

GRANT AND BADEAU.

The Latter's Part in Writing the Grant Memoirs.

When the war broke out the late Gen. Badeau volunteered in the Federal army. He was appointed captain and aide-de-camp on Gen. Thomas W. Sherman's staff, and served until April, 1862, when he was transferred to the staff of Gen. Q. A. Gilmore. In the same month he again joined Gen. Sherman's staff and served until May, 1863, when he was transferred to the staff of Gen. Grant. On May 27, however, he was severely wounded in the assault on Port Hudson, and was unable to join Gen. Grant's command until March, 1864, when he recovered, and was made military secretary to Gen. Grant, with the rank of lieutenant-colonel.

He served with Grant in the campaign of the Wilderness and in the operations before Richmond and Petersburgh, and until 1869, when he was retired with the full rank of captain and the brevet rank of brigadier-general.

From May to December, 1869, Gen. Badeau served as secretary of the American Legation in London, and in 1870 was made the bearer of dispatches from this government to Madrid. He was consul-general to London in May, 1870, and held that post until September, 1881.

In 1877 and 1878 he accompanied Gen. Grant in his trip around the world. He was consul-general to Havanna from May, 1882, to April, 1884, but resigned because he was not permitted to substantiate charges made by him against the State department. He declined two appointments in the diplomatic service, one being that of minister to Belgium, which was offered to him by President Grant in 1875, the other that of minister to Denmark, offered in 1881.

In 1868 Gen. Badeau began his "Military History of Ulysses S. Grant," which occupied him sixteen years. His other literary works are "The Conspiracy, a Cuban Romance;" "Aristocracy in England" and "Grant in Peace."

In 1884, when Gen. Grant undertook his "Memoirs," he employed Gen. Badeau to assist him in compiling and editing material for the work, and it was in connection with that undertaking that the quarrel arose between the two which resulted in the disruption of their friendly relations, and a lawsuit brought by Gen. Badeau against the estate of Gen. Grant after the latter's death.

The suit was brought on Oct. 7, 1887. Gen. Badeau alleged in his complaint that he had been engaged for sixteen years prior to 1881 in the preparation of his "Military History of Gen. Grant," with the understanding between them that Gen. Grant himself should never write an account of his life. Gen. Badeau averred that he had spent $10,000 on the work, in addition to his time, for which he had never been reimbursed.

He alleged that in July, 1884, Gen. Grant sent for him to assist in his work on his own memoirs, and that while driving one day Gen. Grant proposed that if Gen. Badeau would help him to write the book he would give him $5,000 out of the first $20,000 derived in profits, and $5,000 more out of the next $10,000 in profits.

Gen. Badeau alleged further that there was a secret agreement entered into between Gen. Grant and himself, and intimidated that it was to the effect that the authorship of the work should be a joint one, but that he was only to share in the profits. In his affidavit Gen. Badeau said that the "Personal Memoirs of U. S. Grant" was the joint work of Grant and himself to the extent that he "put all his knowledge of the subject and literary experience at Grant's service, to extract from said Grant his own ideas, to revive his memories, to arouse his thoughts, to inspire his judgment and expression, and afterward to correct his statements and revise his language, so that it should be more than ever Grant's."

He alleged that Gen. Grant said to him: "Badeau, I know I could never have written this book without you; no one else could have done what you are doing for me; no one else knows me or my theme so well. I think I could have written a very passable account of what I recollect, but I know the value of your corrections of my grammar and revision of my style, and of your arrangement, and, above all, of your suggestions, and I am very grateful to you."

Gen. Badeau alleged further that when he and Gen. Grant first talked of the work they estimated the profits at $30,000, of which he was to have one-third, but he said that the profits had been more than ten times as much, or $300,000, and asked for an accounting of the money received by Mrs. Grant on account of the book and that his just share be awarded him.

The Grant family, while admitting the justice of Gen. Badeau's claim from a monetary point of view, denied that there was any secret agreement between Gen. Grant and Gen. Badeau, and alleged that the latter's only connection with the work had been that of an amanuensis.

In her answer to Gen. Badeau's complaint Mrs. Grant said that she had never been unwilling to reimburse Gen. Badeau for the assistance he had rendered her husband in the preparation of his book, but she resented the insinuation that Gen. Badeau was in any sense the joint author of the work, and demanded that Gen. Badeau retract what he had said on the subject before she would consent to a settlement of the matter.

Gen. Badeau finally signed a statement that no secret existed between Gen. Grant and himself that, if divulged, would affect Gen. Grant's honor, and the suit was settled on Oct. 30, 1888, by the payment to Gen. Badeau of $10,000.

Fate Was Kind to the Baby.

A touching story comes from Turin. In a narrow valley, near the celebrated Thermæ di Vinadio, there is a little hamlet, which, every winter, is almost completely separated from the rest of the world by the snow. A few days ago an avalanche rolled into the valley, and, reaching some of the houses, carried off the roof of one and completely crushed and buried another, in which were two peasants and their child. The neighbors immediately proceeded to dig them out, making a tunnel through the snow, but found the mother and father dead. The baby, however, was found in its cradle under two tables which had fallen one against the other, forming a kind of roof. A dog was also in the cradle, with its nose against the face of the child.

Queen Victoria's Mare.

The Queen's favorite riding mare is called Jessie, and has now attained to the ripe old age of twenty-six years. It may surprise some to know that as recently as three years ago this mare carried Her Majesty upon her broad back. Jessie is first favorite among the Queen's horses, and whenever Her Majesty is at Windsor is taken up to the castle for inspection.—Tit-Bits.

REAL WHALING.

BOWHEAD AND SPERM THE SPECIES VALUABLE TO FISHERMEN.

A Monster's Cunning Cannot Avoid the Effects of the Combined Harpoon and Dynamite Gun. Great Excitement For the Men.

"It was in the old whaling bark Ohio, Capt. Ellis," said the narrator, "that I made my first whaling voyage. That was back in 1886. It is Pacific and Arctic whaling that I am speaking of.

"When cruising in those waters in search of whales, a whaler keeps three men aloft during the daytime.

"There may be days and days with never a cry from aloft, and then, on a sudden, will be heard the welcome hail to the deck of 'Oh, ——, b-l-o-w-s!' The cry electrifies a crew as does 'Sail, ho!' from a cruiser's masthead when the enemy is the quest.

"The Captain immediately goes and makes an examination of the spouter through his glass. In the Pacific and Arctic waters there are two kinds of whales that he wants, and three kinds that he will have nothing to do with. The species that he wants is the bowhead and the sperm. The ones he does not want are the finback, humpback and the sulphur bottom. These may have other names but are not known by any other to whalers.

"The Captain is enabled to tell what manner of whale it is by the nature of its spout. The sperm whale is distinguished by the full, bushy sort of fountain which it projects into the air. If the spouts are at frequent intervals and if the water is thrown high in a slender jet, the Captain says nothing that is nice, descends from his perch and the vessel plods along her way.

"But, if the stream is low and much dispersed, there is a bracing up and of yards and a clearing away of whaleboats. All hands are called on deck, and four of the five boats are manned and sent in pursuit of the whale. One boat is always kept in reserve in case of emergency, but only enough men are kept on board to trim sail and work ship.

"Whales have a most acute hearing and the swish of the boat through the water, even when propelled by silent oars, is often enough to frighten a whale, and then he is off like a locomotive. Now, as for oars and rowlocks, such as are represented in most whaleboats exploits, this is rank absurdity. The splash of an oar would send a whale to the right about before you could get within a quarter of a mile of him. They are harder to creep upon than are the wild deer of the forest.

"Therefore the noiseless sail is used if there is any breeze, and if there is not, paddles such as the North American Indian uses in propelling his canoe are got out and the boat pushed toward the leviathan by cautious dips. Care is taken never to splash water, and the men move about in the boat in their stocking feet.

"A boat is never steered near a whale's head or near his tail. A blow from his tail would smash a boat into kindling wood and his jaws are generally big enough to crush a boat as easily as a nut cracker can break a filbert. Care therefore is take to steer clear of the dangerous extremities, and to sneak alongside the monster's vast body.

"The steerer, meanwhile, has taken his station in the bow of the boat, the officer in charge being at the steering oar. The boat nears the big hulk of flesh and when near enough to strike, the steerer hurls the missile which he has held poised in air, and aims to strike the whale just abaft the fin.

"On the end of a short wooden shaft a detachable iron harpoon is fitted. On the head of the same shaft is fitted a dynamite gun pointed at the end, but not detachable from the shaft. Harpoon and gun cut into the flesh at the same time. A sharp jerk backwards detaches the harpoon, which remains fast in the whale and at the same time explodes the dynamite cartridge.

"If the steerer's aim has been true, the crew have nothing more to do except to back water quickly and watch the dying monster's agonies. That sometimes happens, but most often the whale is only maddened by the wound, and, plunging under the surface with a maelstrom swirl which half swamps his puny enemy, starts away with the speed of an express.

"Then comes the excitement and danger. The line which is fastened to the harpoon spins out so fast that the woodwork smokes where it rushes over the side, and Heaven save any one who becomes entangled in the zipping coils! The whipping rings would cut a man in two or amputate a leg or an arm quicker than a cleaver could cut an apple in two.

"The steerer, hatchet in hand, stands ready to cut the line should the whale not stop before it is all run out. The last fathom is called 'the bitter end' and when that is reached the hatchet falls, otherwise his whaleship would drag the boat under water.

"But the lines are so long that that does not happen often. The whale generally stops before it has run out. When he does the line slackens, and then comes the supreme moment. No one knows where he is going to come up, and he is just as apt to come up directly under the boat as anywhere else. That has frequently happened, and very few boats or their crews have survived the happening.

"When the whale does reach the surface his rule is always to run. The boat's crew take a turn of the line around a bit, and give the whale his head. Then they hold on to the thwarts or gunwales and try to catch their breath as the boat whizzes along. For the whale it is a race that kills. He keeps it up as long as he can, but race as he may, the imbedded iron will not draw and release him from his enemy.

"Finally he slackens his pace and then comes to a stop. The boat's crew take on to the line and hand over hand haul the boat close to the whale.

"The rest is comparatively easy, supposing that the whale does not attack the boat. The man who, for some strange reason is called the boat steerer, changes places with the officer who has actually been steering the boat and takes charge of the steering oar.

"The officer who has relinquished it goes to the bow of the boat, and loading the bomb gun fires dynamite bombs into the whale. Whales are emanable to that explosive when the missiles are rightly placed. All excitement dies with him, and then the plodding work of towing the carcass to the ship, of 'trying out,' and the tiresome rest of it commences."

ELASTIC HOTEL BILLS.

How Drummers May Beat a Tattoo on Their Employer's Bank Account.

"How much shall I make out your bill for?" inquired the country hotel clerk, as the guest was leaving.

"Make it out for what I owe," replied the man, a little surprised.

"The bill is $6," continued the clerk, with an ingratiating smile, "but I'd just as soon make it out for $9 or $10. It's all the same to us."

"Perhaps it is," the puzzled guest exclaimed, "but it isn't to me. Why should I pay $9 or $10 when my bill is $6?"

"Aren't you a drummer?" the clerk suddenly demanded.

"Certainly not." There was a pause, and then the guest suddenly demanded:

"What's all this business about fake bills, anyway?"

"We always make out bills 'to suit' for drummers," explained the clerk, "so's they can come out even on their expense accounts. A traveling man who pays us $6 can get a receipt for $10 if he likes, and when he settles with his employers he shows them the receipted bill and pockets the difference. I thought you were a drummer."

"No, I'm not," replied the guest, "but I know a good many drummers. In fact, I employ about a hundred, and I notice that when they come to this town they always stop at this hotel. I observe, also, that it's a $2 joint and that I'm always charged $3.50. Never mind, though. I'll lay for the next man who stops here."

And as he went out the clerk looked as if he thought he had put his foot right in it and the foot was held there.

The Sure Signs All Failed.

There is a young couple in this city who can never go away from home together without being taken for a newly married pair. So they decided to ask the waiter at a hotel where they stopped what the signs were. The gentleman began the conversation.

"Would you think we were just married, John?" he asked, on the second day after their arrival.

"Yes, sah," said John, with a broad grin. "I spotted you as soon as I see you. I been ten year in dis hotel, an' dere can't nobody fool me."

"Now, John," said the supposed bridegroom, as he slipped a fee into the waiter's palm, "just tell me what the symptoms are."

"Dere's a heap of 'em, sah." answered John. "I hears you ask yoh lady at breakfus if she like broiled eyesters, an' you tell her she mus' learn to drink her tea straight, 'cause it was bettah, an' you ask her whar she want to go fus; dems all signs, certain suah, sah."

"But," said the young matron, don't old husbands talk in the same way?"

"No, indeedy, miss—'scuse me, ma'am, they don't, indeedy. Sides, yoh gentleman hand you de mornin' papah, 'sted of readin' of it himself. An' dere ain't no gettin' aroun' the lovin' looks he's been castin' on you, miss," and John smiled with an air of superior wisdom.

"Now tell us how the old married men conduct themselves," said the lady.

"Deys mighty sh rt, miss, mostly, an' read the paper jes like dey was alone."

"And the lady, what does she do?"

"Jes waits, miss. Kind of looks tired, an' waits, an' look at the res of the folkses in the dining room. You see, miss, it's a heap of difference, an' taint all in the close dey wears, either, dat makes the honeymoon—no, sah, it ain't."

They did not undeceive John, and he does not yet know that for once all his signs had failed him.—Detroit Free Press.

Garfield as a Book Reviewer.

Concerning Garfield's inordinate love for books a new story is told here. When he first came to Washington his salary was not sufficient to support his family and to gratify his taste for literature, and it was his large expenditure for new books, in fact, which kept him poor and added to his difficulties. In those days Garfield devoured every new book that came from the press, and his mania in this direction led to an arrangement between himself and the proprietors of the book store here. At the time publishers were in the habit of sending two copies of all new works to dealers for the purpose of securing reviews in the newspapers, and this firm asked Garfield if he would like to have the new books turned over to him for review. "I never saw a happier man than Garfield was when this proposal was made to him," says the book dealer. "He fairly hugged me for joy. Every night thereafter for three years he would stop at the store on his way from the House and take home with him an armful of new books. Then he would sit up nearly all night, reading these and writing out notices for the newspapers, bringing us the copy the next morning. I can turn to the files of the old newspapers and show you columns of book notices written by Mr. Garfield."—Chicago Times-Herald.

He Pasted the Labels On Again.

A Chicago woman who has traveled extensively and who intends to make her annual departure for Europe in a short time sent her steamer trunk to a a Randolph street establishment to be repaired.

The workman who was put in charge of the job was a willing soul and he wanted the trunk to appear as if it were new. Accordingly, he went over it with hot water and a sponge, and peeled off all the disfiguring labels placed there by the steamship companies, railways and hotels of foreign countries.

He did not know that the especial pride of a traveler is the number of labels on his trunk. These labels show that she has been in London, Paris, Berlin, Vienna, Rome, Constantinople and Cairo, stopping at first class hotels and traveling by the best routes. A trunk has no dignity until it is plastered over with the colored pieces of paper.

The workman didn't know that—at least, not until the woman came in to inspect the repairs, and then there was a scene.

First, she screamed, and then she wanted to break down and cry. The proprietor told how sorry he was, and the workman made his frightened apology. He happened to remember that he had thrown the labels into a waste basket, so he searched and found most of them, although they were torn and badly crumpled.

However, he spent two hours in piecing out the labels and sticking them back on the trunk, so there was some balm for the woman's feelings.

Now there is a rule in that shop:

"Never remove a label from a trunk or valise."—Chicago Record.

DEAD AGIN FITTIN'.

For one long minute Matsy Delihanty hung by her elbows on the top of the high board fence closing in the yard back of O'Flaherty's saloon—a minute of great bodily agony to her, but of fully as great mental pleasure.

"Hit him agin, Pete," she called in her wild shrill tones, and the boys around the sluggers cheered her gayly; then her elbows gave out and she dropped back to the ash heap in the alley. As she turned reluctantly toward the backyard of her own tenement she was amazed to find herself confronting Mr. Ephraim Brown, the theological student who had charge of the Presbyterian mission around the corner.

"Blessed if it ain't you!" she gasped.

Mr. Brown looked at her sadly, and his voice was very plaintive as he said:

"And you, Matsy? Isn't that a fight over there?"

"Yep, they are fittin'," she said, defiantly, "and it's boss fittin' Pete O'Brien is doin', too!" She warmed to her subject as the memory of Pete's strong right arm came back vividly and she added: "I tell yer, the way Pete ken slug is jis' grand! You'd orter seen that last round, Mr. Brown—no fancy tricks fur Pete, but jis' old timey licks that 'ud knock out any feller in Chicago in no time 't all."

"And you," said young Mr. Brown, dolefully, "you, Matsy Delihanty, the oldest girl in my Bible class, are spending the Sabbath afternoon watching rough men fight like brutes in the back yard of a saloon."

Matsy hung her head and twisted her thin fingers together nervously, or at least with the appearance of nervousness.

"Yep," she said, "that 'un you are mentioning is me straight enough—and the worst of the biz, Mr. Brown, is jis' this, that I don't know as I'd have grace enough to keep off the fence when there was fittin' on 't other side if I went to a Bible class twenty million years—not even if 'twas yore'n!"

She raised her great gray eyes humbly as she confessed her weakness, and in spite of himself Mr. Ephraim Brown blushed as he met the appealing glance from under the black lashes. Of late being confessed to by Matsy Delihanty had often embarrassed him, and he went into the kitchen with her hurriedly, with no further comment on her sinful way of passing the Sabbath.

"I dropped in to see how your rheumatism was," he said to the old man who sat over the stove in spite of the warmth of the early spring day.

Matsy's father growled a little in reply. To be sure he was done with priests, but that was no reason for taking up with Presbyterian ministers. He had decided that he and Matsy were to be free thinkers—"not afeard of no divil nor nobody, me and my gurris," was his creed nowadays—and Matsy's sudden "shine" toward orthodoxy was very annoying to him. He, therefore, made no pretense of being glad to see his girl's pastor, and even denied himself the keen pleasure of telling how bad his rheumatism was, so after a few awkward moments the young fellow rose to go. Matsy walked down the long hall of the tenement with him, after giving one indignant glance back at her father as they left the room. They paused for a moment on the front steps, and Brown looked down almost shyly at the slim little figure by him.

"Matsy," he said, "I wish you wouldn't go to fights or have anything to do with such coarse, rough fellows as that Pete O'Brien."

"Cut Pete?" said Matsy, her meekness vanishing at once. "Not if this is Matsy Delihanty a talkin'! Pete's all right, and if bein' a Presbyterian means goin' back on old friends then I'm out of the church and back with dad, though he ain't deservin' to have me stick to him that can't be dacint to his gurri's company! I'm goin' to the dance with Pete to-morrer night, anyhow, so cuttin' ain't in order jis' now."

She flung out her words boldly, but her eyes showed that she was not altogether at ease.

"Going to the dance with him?" said Brown. "Oh, don't Matsy."

Matsy looked down, her long lashes concealing the expression in her eyes. "I've told you all along, Mr. Brown," she said, "that I wasn't in religion any too deep."

The boy flushed even a brighter red. He stepped back in the doorway and laid his hand on her shoulder.

"Matsy," he said, hurriedly, "if you won't stay away from that ball for the sake of the church, won't you to—to please a friend?"

Matsy caught her breath.

"But, Pete—" she began tremulously.

"Send Pete to me if he makes a row," Brown cried, fiercely. He touched her cheek with his other hand and made her look up at him. "You'd never care for a fellow like that," he said positively.

Steps on the stair above them made Matsy pull away and give him a little push toward the door. "Yes," she said, as the woman from the rooms above came tramping down the stairway, surveying the slender young man with marked curiosity, "yes, I'll be at the Bible class shure next Sunday, Mr. Brown."

He did not move, and she turned unconcernedly toward her own quarters. When the woman had gone out on the street she added, softly, "and mebbe I won't be at—other concerns." Then she scudded away to give dad the richly deserved scolding.

Ephraim Brown walked down the street with his heart beating racingly. "It's my place to look out for my flock," he said to himself, but when he was in his room above the mission hall he flung up both his windows and then tramped the little room fiercely.

"If a fellow is going to spend his life in the slums—working to save souls—what better help could he have than a wife right from the people, one who is in touch with them? Why, it would double, triple, quadruple his influence and power for good!"

Over and over he said such words as these, saying them defiantly as if the father and mother, who perhaps would have to hear them some day, were at hand now. Then his fierce mood died away and he sat down by his table and took up his Bible, dropping from it slips of paper on one side of which references to texts were written and on the other "Matsy."

"She's my first convert," he said, tenderly. "The 'profs.' are right—there is no joy like saving souls. Matsy, Matsy, and she does not care for religion, wild as she talks, and she does not care for"—he broke off, but sat with a half smile on his face, marking idly on the papers, below Matsy's name, "love," "love."

Suddenly he gave a little start. "I must not decide such a matter without long hours of prayer and much counseling with others," he said in the tones which were usually reserved for his Wednesday night prayer meeting. On the slip of paper he wrote, in front of the word love, two other words—"God is;" and then he took down a volume of sermons and began at the very beginning—and ended there, too, for that matter.

The next afternoon he was again alone in his room when suddenly there came a thundering knock at his door and in marched Pete O'Brien with his face red and his eyes blazing.

Brown sprang to his feet and pushed his Bible away. His eyes, too, were blazing, and he did not wait for Pete to announce the reason for his visit.

"I suppose you've come," he began, fiercely; but the burly fellow interrupted him.

"And you s'pose right," he said. "I've kem to break that blasted head of yore's."

"You mayn't find that as easy a job as you expect," said Brown, jerking off his coat. Preacher or no preacher he was not going to let a half drunken Irishman insult him.

"It's the gurri I've kem to talk about," said Pete. "She ain't fur sayin' why she won't keep her wurrd fur to-night, but the ould chap sez it's you an' your tarnation Bible class as is at the bottom of the whole mess. I ain't set on lickin' yer, but that's what I'm after doin' if you don't git it in your noddle pretty quick that Matsy's the gurri I'm going to marry!"

Brown threw the table out of the way and went at the big fellow. "You old idiot," he thundered, "Matsy's the girl I'm going to marry!"

They fell upon each other with full as much vim as if they had been in O'Flaherty's back yard on a Sunday afternoon—but meanwhile the door had opened and Matsy had walked in.

"And I tell yer," she called in her shrillest tones, "that the chap that lets fly the first lick ain't the boy that Matsy's goin' to take."

With the modesty of the girl who does not refuse before she is definitely asked, she added: "And that's not sayin', of course, that she's goin' to take the other."

The men—or rather boys—looked at her dazedly. She walked a little nearer to them and said, with a sarcastic uplifting of her nostrils: "Of course, you gents are at liberty to carry on jis' as you choose, but there's one thing Matsy Delihanty has got to say, and that is that she's dead agin fittin', and she's goin' to have no more to do with them as stick to sech coarse pursoots."

She turned toward the door and Pete followed her. Brown looked after her almost piteously, and at the door she turned her head toward him.

"I'm too deep in—religion to stand such goin's on," she remarked, with an airy wave of her thin little hand.

Brown was 20 that spring.—The Chap-Book.

NEW HAMPSHIRE FORESTS.

They Cover Sixty Per Cent. of the State, but Are Not Conserved Property.

The second annual report of the New Hampshire Forestry Commission says that the forest area comprises practically 60 per cent. of the entire area of the State, and has not greatly changed since the publication of the report of the first temporary forestry commission in 1885. The amount of virgin spruce forest in New Hampshire is 525,000 acres, about 300,000 acres of this being in the White Mountain district. The annual product from its acreage is about 280,000 feet board measure, and the amount used for pulp is increasing about 15 per cent. each year. The lumberman, as a rule, continue to cut their lands "clean," thereby destroying all opportunity for reproduction of spruce by growth of small trees, while the large pulp mills, which own vast tracts of virgin forests, cut none less than twelve inches in diameter at the stump, and are already reaping the benefits of such a course.

The methods of lumbering are discussed, and the conclusion is arrived at that a change is necessary, and that the State must soon face the question how it will stay the ruthless waste and protect its forests. It is suggested that by the exercise of the right of eminent domain for the erection of a series of public forest preserves the State could effectually secure this object and make the White Mountain range a source of constant income, unfailing water supply and perpetual scenic pleasure.

BY ARTHUR MORRISON

THE CASE OF THE MISSING HAND

[Copyright, 1895, by Bacheller, Johnson and Bacheller.]

CHAPTER II.

Hewitt and I had of course at this time never heard of Mr. Sneathy, and the colonel told us what little he knew. He had never spoken to the man, he said—indeed nobody in the place outside Ranworth would have anything to do with him. "He's certainly been an unholy scoundrel over those poor people's banks," said my uncle, "and if what they say's true he's been about as bad as possible to his wretched wife. He must have been pretty miserable, too, with all his scoundrelism, for he was a completely ruined man, without a chance of retrieving his position, and detested by everybody. Indeed, some of his recent doings, if what I have heard is to be relied on, have been very much those of a madman. So that on the whole I'm not much surprised. Suicide's about the only crime I suppose that he never experimented with till now, and, indeed, it's rather a service to the world at large—his only service, I expect."

The colonel sent a man to make further inquiries, and presently this man returned with the news that now it was said that Mr. Sneathy had not committed suicide, but had been murdered. And hard on the man's heels came Mr. Hardwick, a neighbor of my uncle's and a fellow J. P. He had had the case reported to him, it seemed, as soon as the body had been found and had at once gone to the spot. He found the body hanging—and with the right hand cut off.

"It's a murder, Brett," he said, "without doubt a most horrible case of murder and mutilation. The hand is cut off and taken away, but whether the atrocity was committed before or after the hanging, of course, I can't say. But the missing hand makes it plainly a case of murder, and not suicide. I've come to consult you about issuing a warrant, for I think there's no doubt as to the identity of the murderers."

"That's a good job," said the colonel, "else we should have had some work for Mr. Martin Hewitt here, which wouldn't be fair, as he's taking a rest. Who do you think of having arrested?"

"The two young Fosters. It's as plain as it can be—and a most revolting crime, too, bad as Sneathy may have been. They came down from London to-day and went out deliberately to do it, it's clear. They were heard talking of it, asked as to the direction in which he had gone and followed him—and with a rope."

"Isn't that rather an unusual form of murder—hanging?" Hewitt remarked.

"Perhaps it is," Mr. Hardwick replied, "but it's the case here, plain enough. It seems, in fact, that they had a way of threatening to hang him and even to cut off his hand if he used it to strike their mother. So that they appear to have carried out what might have seemed mere idle threats in a diabolically savage way. Of course they may have strangled him first and hanged him after, by way of carrying out their threat and venting their spite on the mutilated body. But that they did it is plain enough to me. I've spent an hour or two over it and feel I am certainly more than justified in ordering their apprehension. Indeed they were with him at the time, as I've found by their tracks on the footpath through the wood."

The colonel turned to Martin Hewitt. "Mr. Hardwick, you must know," he said, "is by way of being an amateur in your particular line—and a very good amateur, too, I should say, judging by a case or two I have known of in this county."

Hewitt bowed and laughingly expressed a fear lest Mr. Hardwick should come to London and supplant him altogether. "This seems a curious case," he added. "If you don't mind I think I should like to take a glance at the tracks and whatever other traces there may be, just by way of keeping my hand in."

"Certainly," Mr. Hardwick replied, brightening. "I should of all things like to have Mr. Hewitt's opinion on the observations I have made—just for my own gratification. As to his opinion there can be no room for doubt. The thing is plain."

With many promises not to be late for dinner we left my uncle and walked with Mr. Hardwick in the direction of Ratherby wood. It was an unfrequented part, he told us, and by particular care he had managed, he hoped, to prevent the rumor spreading to the village yet, so that we might hope to find the tracks not yet overlaid. It was a man of his own, he said, who, making a short cut through the wood, had come upon the body hanging, and had run immediately to inform him. With this man he had gone back, cut down the body and made his observations. He had followed the trail backwards to Ranworth and there had found the new coachman, who had once been in his own service. From him he had learned the doings of the brothers Foster as they left the place, and from him he had ascertained that they had not yet returned. Then leaving his man by the body he had come straight to my uncle's.

Presently we came on the footpath leading from Ranworth across the fields to Ratherby wood. It was a mere trail of bare earth worn by successive feet amid the grass. It was damp, and we all stooped and examined the footmarks that were to be seen on it. They all pointed one way—toward the wood in the distance.

"Fortunately it's not a greatly frequented path," Mr. Hardwick said. "You see, there are the marks of three pairs of feet only, and as first Sneathy and then both of the brothers came this way the footmarks must be theirs. Which are Sneathy's is plain—they are these large, flat ones. If you notice, they are all distinctly visible in the center of the track, showing plainly that they belong to the man who walked alone, which was Sneathy. Of the others, the marks of the outside feet—the left on the left side and the right on the right—are often not visible. Clearly they belong to the two men walking side by side and, more often than not, treading with their outer feet on the grass at the side. And where these happen to drop on the same spot as the marks in the middle, they cover them. Plainly, they are the footmarks of Henry and Robert Foster, made as they followed Sneathy. Don't you agree with me, Mr. Hewitt?"

"Oh, yes, that's very plain. You have a better pair of eyes than most people, Mr. Hardwick, and a good idea of using them to. We will go on to the wood now. As a matter of fact, I can pretty clearly distinguish most of the other footmarks—those on the grass, but that's a matter of much training."

We followed the footpath, keeping on the grass at its side, in case it should be desirable to refer again to the foot-tracks. For some little distance into the wood the tracks continued as before, those of the brothers overlaying those of Sneathy. Then there was a difference. The path here was broader and muddy, because of the proximity of trees, and suddenly the outer foot-prints separated, and no more overlay the longer ones in the center, but proceeded at an equal distance on either side of them.

"See there," cried Mr. Hardwick, pointing triumphantly to the spot, "this is where they overtook him, and walked on either side. The body was found only a little further on—you could see the place now if the path didn't zig-zag about so."

Hewitt said nothing, but stooped and examined the tracks at the sides with great care and evident thought, spanning the distances between them comparatively with his arms. Then he rose and stepped lightly from one mark to another, taking care not to tread on the mark itself. "Very good," he said, shortly, on finishing his examination. "We'll go on."

We went on, and presently came to the place where the body lay. Here the ground sloped from the left down toward the right and a tiny streamlet, a mere trickle of a foot or two wide, ran across the path. In rainy seasons it was probably wider, for all the earth and clay had been washed away for some feet on each side, leaving flat, bare and very coarse gravel, on which the trail was lost. Just beyond this, and to the left, the body lay on a grassy knoll under the limb of a tree from which still depended a part of the cut rope. It was not a pleasant sight. The man was a soft, fleshy creature, probably rather under than over the medium height, and he lay there, with his stretched neck and protruding tongue, a revolting object. His right arm lay by his side, and the stump of the wrist was clotted with black blood. Mr. Hardwick's man was still in charge, seemingly little pleased with his job, and a few yards off stood a couple of countrymen, looking on.

Hewitt asked from which direction these men had come, and, having ascertained and noted their footmarks, he asked them to stay exactly where they were to avoid confusing such other tracks as might be seen. Then he addressed himself to his examination. "First," he said, glancing up at the branch that was scarce a yard above his head, "this rope has been here for some time."

"Yes," Mr. Hardwick replied, "it's an old swing rope. Some children used it in the summer, but it got partly cut and frayed and the old couple of yards has been hanging since."

"Ah!" said Hewitt, "then if the Fosters did this they were saved some trouble by the chance and were able to take their halter back with them—and so avoid one chance of detection." He very closely scrutinized the top of a tree stump, probably the relic of a tree that had been cut down long before, and then addressed himself to the body.

"When you cut it down," he said, "did it fall in a heap?"

"No, my man eased it down to some extent."

"Not on to its face?"

"Oh, no. On to its back, just as it is now." Mr. Hardwick saw that Hewitt was looking at muddy marks on each of the corpse's knees, to one of which a small leaf clung, and at one or two other marks of the same sort on the fore part of the dress. "That seems to show pretty plainly," he said, "that he must have struggled with them and was thrown forward, doesn't it?"

Hewitt did not reply, but gingerly lifted the right arm by its sleeve. "Is either of the brothers Foster left-handed?" he asked.

"No, I think not. Here, Barrett, you have seen plenty of their doings—cricket, shooting and so on—do you remember if either is left-handed?"

"Nayther, sir," Mr. Hardwick's man answered. "Both on 'em's right-handed."

Hewitt lifted the lapel of the coat and attentively regarded a small rent in it. The dead man's hat lay near, and after a few glances at that Hewitt dropped it and turned his attention to the hair. This was coarse and dark and long, and brushed straight back with no parting.

"This doesn't look very symmetrical, does it?" Hewitt remarked, pointing to the locks over the right ear. They were shorter just there than on the other side, and apparently very clumsily cut, whereas in every other part the hair appeared to be rather well and carefully trimmed. Mr. Hardwick said nothing, but fidgeted a little as though he considered that valuable time was being wasted over irrelevant trivialities.

Presently, however, he spoke. "There is very little to be learned from the body, is there?" he said. "I think I'm quite justified in ordering their arrest, eh? Indeed I've wasted too much time already."

Hewitt was groping about among some bushes behind the tree from which the corpse had been taken. When he answered he said: "I don't think I should do anything of the sort just now, Mr. Harwick. As a matter of fact, I fancy,"—this word with an emphasis—"that the brothers Foster may not have seen this man Sneathy at all to-day."

LINCOLN AND HAMLIN.

The Facts as to Preferences in the Matter of the Vice Presidency.

I [illegible] hoped to see Mr. Hamlin renominated, and had [illegible]xionally given Mr. Lincoln many opportunities to say whether he preferred the renomination of the Vice President; but he was cruelly and rigidly noncommittal, knowing, as he did, what was in my mind concerning Mr. Hamlin. He would refer to the matter only in the vaguest phrase, as "Mr. Hamlin's a very good man," or, "You, being a New Englander, would naturally like to see Mr. Hamlin renominated; and you are quite right," and so on. By this time Lincoln's renomination was an absolute certainty, and he cheerfully conceded that point without any false modesty. But he could not be induced to express any opinion on the subject of the selection of a candidate for Vice President. He did go so far as to say that he hoped that the convention would declare in favor of the constitutional amendment abolishing slavery as one of the articles of the party faith. But beyond that, nothing.

I may say here that when I returned from the convention I made a verbal report to the President, and entertained him with an account of some of its doings of which he had not previously heard; and he was then willing to admit that he would have been gratified if Mr. Hamlin had been renominated. But he said:

"Some of our folks [referring, as I believed, to Republican leaders] had expressed the opinion that it would be wise to take a War Democrat as candidate for Vice President, and that, if possible, a border State man should be the nominee." Mr. Lincoln appeared to be satisfied with the result, saying, "Andy Johnson, I think, is a good man." Nevertheless, I have always been confident that Lincoln, left to himself, would have chosen that the old ticket of 1860—Lincoln and Hamlin—should be placed in the field. It is reasonable to suppose that he had resolved to leave the convention entirely free in its choice of a candidate for the second place on the ticket.—Century Magazine.

TROLLEY'S TOUGH TIME.

Madison Avenue Drives It Into Retreat.

NETHERWOOD ALSO FIGHTS HARD.

And Even in Richmond Street All Is Not Clear Sailing—The Common Council Asks the Railway Company to Show Its Hand of Consents — Electrician Serrell Says Things in a Remarkable Affidavit.

A score of substantial citizens braved the downpour of rain last night to attend the street-railway session of the Plainfield Common Council. The regular order of business was suspended to accomodate those who had aught to say on the matter of granting the extension franchises.

Samuel E. Collins, for himself, his mother and his sister, protested against the running of the road through Fourth street, because he held that it would be an annoyance to himself and family and an injury to his property. He asked if a majority of the frontages had signed. President See said that the consents would have to be submitted to the Corporation Counsel for his decision as to their technical accuracy.

Chas C Burke said that he spoke for a majority of the residents of Woodland avenue, against the building of the road through that highway. The others whom he represented were Messrs Vandeventer, Hermance, Dyatt and Callahan. It was, he said, possible that the company had the right of way of a majority of the frontage on the street, but even if they had that did not necessarily impose on the Council the duty to grant the application. The citizens were to be looked to, not the land. The men living there, having their homes there, were the ones to hear. He contended that it was all wrong for the Council to grant rights to a railway on an avenue a majority of whose residents were opposed to the tracks. He trusted that the matter would be laid over so that the people of Netherwood could speak on this question. It had been represented that the road was wanted by the Netherwood people and was in great demand, but he had kept watch and had heard nothing of such a want among his neighbors. He renewed his protest in the strongest terms.

J. B. Coward, appearing for Mr. Hermance, asked if the Council intended to pass the ordinance that night. Mr. Fisk of the Commitee on Streets said that the ordinance was not going to be railroaded through, and that the procedure would be no faster than was consistent with good faith with the company. The map had been sent to the company in Newark for correction, and was to be on inspection at the office of the City Clerk after being again filed. Frank Bushnell protested against any street railway on Madison avenue between Fourth and Sixth streets. Mr. Fisk explained that the application for that route would be withdrawn.

F. E. Kinsman made extended criticism of the proposed ordinance. He pointed out the danger of the company's avoiding the building of the local branches and and building only the line from Fanwood to Dunellen, thus giving the through line the last link it lacked in the chain from Philadelphia to New York. He urged that the company be obliged to build local branches to accommodate the home traffic before being given the privilege of opening up Plainfield streets to the expresses of the through lines. He held that the proposed ordinance conflicted with ordinances already granted. He advised that the rate of income to the city from the company be fixed on the gross earnings, instead of at so much a mile, and said that the rate named per mile in the ordinance would operate as a premium to prevent the company from building the desired local routes to the outskirts. He urged the use of the grooved T-rail, the same as was used on Broadway New York, claiming it was better for carriage wheels than the Plainfield rail that had wrecked so many vehicles. The company should also, he thought, be obliged to give more substantial paving than macadam along their tracks. Concerning fenders he felt that the city should not assume the responsibility of selecting them, but that the company should have the entire responsibility.

Clinton Randolph asked what was to become of the alleged Madison avenue consents if the application for the Madison avenue branch was to be withdrawn. Mr. See said he supposed the company could make renewed application on them if they saw fit. Mr. Fisk added that the consents were not yet filed with the city, and did not have to be, under the law, till just before the final passage of the ordinance. The council had no control over them till after they were filed.

Mr. Kinsman said he did not consider the ordinance in its present shape sufficiently binding on a company of the character of the sort now being dealt with; it was too easy of manipulation afterwards.

A petition was presented from R. L. Burnett, W. F. Hobbie, D. C. Ivins, A. Kayser, and Frank S. Martin, urging the Council to insist on the completion of the branches for local traffic before permitting the through line to be constructed, or before consenting to junction with any line not chartered by Plainfield. The petitioners showed that the proposed ordinance was weak in giving the company a chance to build the through line first and then leaving unbuilt perhaps forever the local branches. If the company was acting in good faith it would readily consent to the amendment the petitioners asked for.

The petition was referred to the Committee on Streets.

On motion of Mr. Dumont, amended by Mr. Fisk, the company was instructed to file with the Corporation Counsel within two weeks the alleged consents for the routes asked for, Counsel to report on their validity at the next regular meeting of the Council.

The following affidavit was read, laughed over, and referred to the Committee on Streets:

PLAINFIELD, N. J., April 8, 1895.

State of New York, } ss.
County of New York. }

Lemuel W. Serrell, of Plainfield, Union County, N. J., being duly sworn, declares as follows:

That he represented the Plainfield Street Railway Company in securing the consents to build their proposed extension on Madison avenue in said city, between Fourth and Sixth streets.

That the first party whose consent he secured was Jeremiah Moore; that he secured Mr. Moore's consent the first time he called upon him; that his conversation with said Moore was in substance as follows: He told Mr. Moore that the railway company was endeavoring to secure rights of way to build certain extensions in the city of Plainfield. When the company secured its original franchise, a franchise was granted to them to build a line through West Seventh street from Monroe avenue to Plainfield avenue, thence through Plainfield avenue to Sixth street, and through Sixth street to Park avenue; that said company had endeavored to secure the consents by various routes, to complete this line to the depot; that they had tried to go through Watchung avenue and Sixth street, through Sycamore street and Sixth street; that they had found it impossible to go through Park avenue, and that the Board of Education had blocked them from going through Arlington avenue; and that at the time of his visit to Mr. Moore, Feb. 27, 1895, the company was endeavoring to secure consents all the way through Fourth street, from Grant avenue to Watchung avenue; that he personally had taken hold of the matter to explain the situation to the people, and that he was desirous of securing Mr. Moore's consent.

And that further, the railway company desired in preference to going through Fourth street to go through to Sixth street; that he did not know whether he would be successful in getting consents to go through Madison avenue.

Mr. Moore said he was willing to sign on Fourth street, and when asked if he would also sign for his Madison avenue frontage he replied if it went in front of his house on one side it might as well go on the other, and that he was willing to sign for both frontages.

After Mr. Moore's consent had been secured, deponent states that he left the house, and it did not occur to him that he should take Mr. Moore's acknowledgment, until he had walked about half a block down the street. He then immediately returned to Mr. Moore's house, told him that Mr. Riker, counsel for the company, had stated that it would be necessary to swear each one of the signers to the consents. He therefore asked Mr. Moore the following question: "Do you hereby acknowledge that you have signed and sealed this consent as your voluntary act and deed, for the uses and purposes therein expressed?" Mr. Moore replied "I do".

Deponent then says that he visited other residents of Madison avenue, that his conversation with them was in substance similar to his conversation with Mr. Moore, and that he secured these consents to which he has signed his name as subscribing witness, and in each case he took the acknowledgment of the parties who signed the consent, by asking them the same question that he did Mr. Moore, to which all replied "I do".

Deponent further says that about a week or ten days after he had secured Mr. Moore's consent, said Moore called upon him one evening, and told him that he desired to withdraw his consent for Madison avenue, that after conversation with deponent, said Moore explained to him that the reason he desired to withdraw his consent was because his wife had heard that the railway company were trying to secure consents through Madison avenue, and was very much opposed to the road being built upon said street. Mr. Moore said further that his wife did not own the property, that he himself was not particularly opposed to the road going through said street, but that he desired said deponent not to make any use of said consent, whereby his wife would find out that he had signed it.

Said deponent further states that he called upon said Moore on the afternoon of April 7, that he discussed with said Moore the entire situation, when said Moore's wife, who was present, told her husband that if he had got himself into trouble by signing his consent, or through any affidavits, that it served him right, that he had no business to sign the consent without first consulting her, and that he could not expect any sympathy from her. Said Moore then walked out on the porch with deponent at the time of deponent's departure, when said deponent then put the following question: "Did I not fill in both the Fourth street and the Madison avenue frontages on the consent in your presence?" Said Moore answered "Yes". "Would you ever have raised any objection to the road going through Madison avenue if your wife had not afterwards made objection?" Said Moore answered "I would not". "When you found that your wife objected so strongly to the road going through Madison avenue, did you not then make an affidavit against me so that you might preserve more peace at home?" Said Moore answered "I did not know I was signing for Madison avenue".

Said deponent further states that he believes that the opposition which has developed against the road going through Madison avenue, has been caused by the efforts of Mr. Runyon the undertaker, and his son. He further states that on one occasion he had spoken to Mr. Elmer Runyon, with reference to securing their consent for the road to go by the property they own on Fourth street at the corner of Park avenue; said Runyon said that he would like to see the road go by this property; that they believed that should the road go by said property it would be beneficial to them and possibly help them to close negotiations for the sale of this property at a good profit; but that his father was unwilling to sign the consent, as the road proposed going up Arlington avenue past the public school, and that he feared that should any accident ever happen to any of the children of the said school by reason of the cars running through Arlington avenue, that the people would say that he, said Runyon, as an undertaker, had signed said consent for business purposes.

Said deponent further states that in spite of the fact that said Runyon believed that said road would increase the value of his property on the corner of Park avenue and Fourth street, that when said railway company abandoned Arlington avenue and attempted to go through Madison avenue, that said Runyon used every effort in his power with the property owners and against the railway company, to cause them to withdraw their consents, simply because he was opposed to the road going close to his dwelling.

Said deponent further states that he has laid the entire matter before said railway company, and that said railway company would prefer to withdraw their application for Madison avenue, rather than to accept a franchise for a road which now seems to be so much against the wishes of the property holders, and that they have authorized said deponent to do so.

LEMUEL W. SERRELL.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 8th day of April, 1895, in the city of New York. Witness my hand and official seal. WILLIAM H. CLARKSON, Commissioner for the State of New Jersey in New York.

Thomas Callahan and John Mair petitioned the Council not to grant right for a trolley line through Richmond street at East Third street and North avenue, because of the hindrance to traffic and business and because of the danger to school children of the district. This too was referred to the Committee on Streets.

Mr. Fisk presented the revised street railway map, and it was filed with the City Clerk. The Street Committee reported back for filing various petitions and documents in the street railway matter.

Mr. Fisk gave notice that the street railway ordinance would come up for action at the next meeting of the Council.

The firearms and snow-and-ice ordinances were adopted on final passage.

Licenses were granted as follows: Jacob Berman, peddler; P. M. French, sprinklers; Wm. S. Woods, peddler with horse and wagon; S. Snolinsky, peddler; F. B. Randolph, truck.

Council adjourned for two weeks, to meet Monday, April 22, at 8 p. m.

NABBED McCLURG.

SERGEANT KIELY ARRESTS THE PAINTER FOR ROBBERY.

It Is Said that He Is Implicated in the Theft of Silver from Mrs. Robinson's Boarding-House — Remanded for Examination.

The details of the robbery which was committed at Mrs. Robinson's boarding-house, West Second street, Sunday morning, are slowly but surely coming to light. It appears that Harry McClurg, a boarder at the house, invited his friend, who is one of the suspicioned ones, to the house to stay all night, and that instead of going to bed they had planned to steal the silver.

As reported yesterday the friend got away, but previous to this the two men were both met and stopped by Policeman Flanagan after leaving the boarding-house. They prevailed on the policeman, however, that nothing was wrong, and thus escaped for the time.

McClurg did not leave town, and yesterday he played innocent of having anything to do with the robbery and even suggested that he would help search for the thief.

Suspicion was aroused and last night Sergeant Kiely, after a little detective work, went to the boarding house and arrested him.

McClurg has been employed as a painter for some time in Plainfield, and has heretofore borne a good character.

During this time Chief Grant was in Elizabethport and had succeeded in locating some of the silverware, which was in Fisher's saloon on Second street. The police were notified and they took charge of the goods which were taken to police headquarters. As yet they have been unable to find McClurg's partner.

McClurg was taken before Justice Nash this morning and remanded for examination at 2 tomorrow afternoon.

Couldn't Beat Them Out of This.

The trophy which was won by the Plainfield bowlers in the Watchung League contest will be received by them at the Board of Trade Building tomorrow evening. An invitation has been extended to the Crescent Wheelmen, Board of Trade, and Bowling Club, together with their friends. A collation will be served after the formal acceptance of the trophy, and a general good time indulged in.

An Illustration of Plainfield's Good Works.

The full significance of the financial statement recently made public from the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian Church through The Daily Press is remarkable when one reflects that that one institution expended in its beneficent work in the year very nearly as much as Plainfield's entire tax for general purposes. And that's only one church out of Plainfield's many.

The Great American Game.

Owing to the inability of several of the committee to be present, no conference of those interested in baseball was held in the Y. M. C. A. Building last night. It is probable that a meeting will be held this evening, when something definite will be decided on in reference to Plainfield enjoying this great National game for the season.

Always Ahead.

Chairman Fisk of the Committee on Streets last night informed citizens inquiring about the exact requirements of the proposed street railway ordinance that the only correct publication of that ordinance was that made in the columns of The Daily Press of last week Tuesday. The Press published the ordinance, in full as amended to date.

Sewer Contract Signed.

The new contract for sewer construction was signed by Honan & Sons and Mayor Gilbert yesterday, and now the unsuccessful bidders will get back the certified checks of $2,000 each which they deposited with the city as a guarantee of good faith.

JACOB NEWELL DEAD.

DIES SUDDENLY FROM HEART FAILURE AT HIS SON'S HOME.

The Fatal Moment Came Soon After Shaving Himself—Had Been Complaining for Some Time—A Respected Citizen.

Jacob Newell, father of Bergen D. Newell, the grocer, died very suddenly today about 12:30 from heart disease, at the home of his son on East Fifth street.

He had been complaining for a week past of heart trouble, but for the last two days seemed to feel much better.

This morning while Edmund Pack, who works for Mr. Newell at the grocery store, was engaged about the barn, Mr. Newell came out and was apparently feeling very well.

He returned to the house and thought he would shave himself, which he did.

After finishing he remarked that he thought it was too much for him, as he felt very faint.

Mrs. Newell at once gave him some stimulants, hoping it would revive him.

Mrs. Newell's daughter went to her father's grocery store to tell him, thinking he had only fainted, but when his son arrived life was gone.

Mr. Newell left town on the 2:08 this afternoon for Stanton, Hunterdon County, to bear the sad news to the relatives who live there, which was the birthplace of the decedent.

BLOCKING THE TROLLEY.

Mr. Moore Has a Side to the Story About That Affidavit.

Now that affidavits are waging warfare between L. W. Serrell, Jr., and Jeremiah Moore, both parties have interesting statements to make. Mr. Moore says, in reply to Mr. Serrell's communication to the Council last night, that Mr. Serrell spent two hours with him trying to get him to withdraw his protest that he had never signed the Madison avenue consent, and that Mr. Serrell's avowed reason for so urging him was because Mr. Moore's protest impugned Mr. Serrell's veracity. Also, Mr. Moore states, the company spent some time after Mr. Serrell saw him, trying to coax him to sign for the Madison avenue consent, despite Mr. Serrell's claim that Mr. Moore had already signed for Madison avenue as well as for Fourth street.

The residents of Madison avenue now claim that the company is effectually blocked from entering that district at all, and from getting by way of Park or Arlington avenue to the Crescent Oval. It is further stated that injunction will be served on the company the moment it attempts to revive and execute the franchise it claims to hold for the Sixth street route under a former ordinance.

A Carrier Boy's Funeral.

Harry Finney, whose death occurred Sunday, was one of the most faithful and obliging of the carrier boys employed by The Daily Press and his pleasant ways will be greatly missed by The Press patrons in the southern part of the city. The funeral will be held tomorrow afternoon at the home of his parents on Manning avenue, when four of the carrier boys will act as bearers.

A Good Day for Bait.

The warm rain of yesterday brought out thousands of worms which speckled the walks all over the city. In many places great bunches of them could be seen laying curled into a tangled mass.

It will be an agreeable surprise to persons subject to attacks of bilious colic to learn that prompt relief may be had by taking Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. In many instances the attack may be prevented by taking this remedy as soon as the first symptoms of the disease appear. 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy, Park and North aves. CHARGES ALL AROUND.

Some Are Electrical and Some Are Financial.

THE LATTER FINALLY PREVAILS.

By the Aid of a Jury in Justice Newcorn's Court the Street Railway Company Are Mulcted for Seventy-Five Dollars in Favor of Valentine Swody—A Funny Action Brought About By a Funny Accident.

Last June a horse owned and driven by Balentine Swody stepped into a puddle of water on Somerset street opposite James Arnold's grocery store. This is a very common occurrence, and naturally causes no comment. But near this pool of water set one of the iron poles supporting the wires of the Plainfield Street Railway Company, which had become charged with electricity. The pole charged the water with current, and water shocked the horse so that he was disabled for work for some time. Then the owner of the horse wanted to charge the railway company with money for the injuries his animal had received.

The company thought that as long as they had charged the water, and the water had charged the equine, that ought to end it. But Swody thought that as long as the veterinary doctor had charged him with good money for relieving the horse from the company's charge, he in turn ought to charge the company something for all the charges he had to settle for.

So when they had disagreed on all these diver charges, Swody brought suit through Judge W. A. Coddington, in Justice Newcorn's court, for damages to the amount of $119.

The case was brought up before the Justice yesterday afternoon, after numerous adjournments, and tried with the following jury, who were selected by Constable George R. Rockefellow: James B Martin, James E Totten, Robert Walker, John Beerbower, George Voehl, George Schelein, John H Cornell, Matthew Kennedy, J S Jones, David VanBuskirk, Henry Haurand and John Brown.

After several witnesses had been sworn and testified, among them Joseph Sohl on expert electrical knowledge, as to the different phases of the charges, electrical, financial and other wise, the jury was given the case. After some deliberation they returned a verdict of $75 for the plaintiff.

The railway company was represented by Depew & Parker of Newark.

An Important Purchase.

The increasing patronage bestowed upon Edsall's Commercial Palace enables him to offer still greater inducements to the people. By disposing of large quantities of goods, he can afford to give large importation orders, and buy in such large lots, thereby securing lower prices than the ordinary buyer. His latest purchase was at the receiver's sale of E. S. Jaffray & Co., one of the largest importing and jobbing concerns in New York city, who are closing out their entire stock. The goods, all new and fresh, will be put on sale today, as can be seen by Edsall's two-column advertisement in The Daily Press today. The prices will average about fifty cents on the dollar, and no doubt the goods will sell quickly.

Run Away and Broke His Neck.

While Hackman Galbraith's horse was standing in front of a residence on Park place yesterday afternoon between 5 and 6, he became frightened and ran away, going as far as Washington avenue. He then circled the square and came back to where he started. When E. C. Pease's residence was reached the animal attempted to jump the fence, which feat was accomplished, but in falling on the other side he broke his neck. Death was instant after the fall.

Organize, and Then Dance.

The Daughters of Liberty will be organized this evening in Red Men's Hall. National Councilor Mrs. M. P. Bush of Mott Haven, N. Y., will initiate. Delegations from Brooklyn, New York, Newark, Jersey City, Elizabeth, Perth Amboy and South Amboy will be present. A dance and collation will follow the installation.

Showers of Sparks.

A brilliant electrical display was noticed by residents of Rose street last night at 8:20, when two live electric light wires became crossed and sent out showers of sparks.

Four Big Successes.

Having the needed merit to more than make good all the advertising claimed for them, the following four remedies have reached a phenomenal sale. Dr. King's New Discovery for consumption, coughs and colds, each bottle guaranteed—Electric Bitters, the great remedy for liver, stomach and kidneys. Bucklen's Arnica Salve, the best in the world and Dr. King's New Life Pills, which are a perfect pill. All these remedies are guaranteed to do just what is claimed for them and the dealer whose name is attached herewith will be glad to tell you more of them. Sold at L. W. Randolph's drug store.

DR. LANSING'S APOLOGY

Retracts What He Said About the President.

The Case Being One of Conflict of Testimony Between Equally Credible Witnesses, and as He Cannot Decide, He Tenders His Apology to Mr. Cleveland for His Assertion.

Boston, April 9.—Rev. I. J. Lansing, whose references to the president in his address before the New England conference at Salem last Thursday night provoked extended criticism, has given out the following statement:

Believed the President Intemperate.

"My allusion made in a temperance address at Salem, on Thursday, April 4, to the drinking habits of the president of the United States was based partly on the testimony of eye witnesses. From various and independent sources which I believed to be wholly reliable, I had been informed that the president had been seen, on different occasions, and in the presence of many persons, in an intoxicated condition.

A Matter of Common Report.

"From the circumstantial and detailed character of these statements, I supposed there was no doubt as to the facts alleged. I therefore made this allusion as a matter of common report, basing my confidence on the testimony of personal, and, as I supposed, credible witnesses. The names of these witnesses obviously, I cannot with propriety reveal, since, sharing their knowledge in common with many others, they might justly shrink from being singled out and called to verify that of which not only they but others, equally with themselves, had ocular proof.

Apologizes to the President.

"I must therefore say that if my statement reproducing such testimony is not in harmony with facts, I regret having made it. I could have neither desire nor motive for saying anything unkind or uncharitable of the president or of any party whatsoever. The case being one of conflict of testimony between witnesses of equal credibility, I cannot decide, and since I have no personal knowledge apart from the testimony, I withdraw the statement, and tender apologies and sincere regrets to the president of the United States and to the public.

"I. J. LANSING."

HER KISS OF GRATITUDE.

Spectators Again Moved to Tears by Miss Dickinson's Testimony.

Scranton, Pa., April 9.—The Anna Dickinson suit was resumed in the United States circuit court yesterday. The plaintiff repeated the story of her being conveyed to the Danville asylum, and her efforts to have telegrams forwarded to Howe and Hummel, of New York, and others. Regarding her kissing Dr. Johnson, she said it was because of her thankfulness at his having greatly benefited her while she was suffering from a severe headache. She kissed him while he was leaning over her taking her pulse. She kissed him on the forehead, but, after hearing the evidence of the doctor, she begged pardon of God for having done so. Concerning the remark that she was a greater woman than Susan B. Anthony, she explained by saying that she had endorsed a note for $5,000 for Miss Anthony, on which the latter had defaulted. She then told Miss Anthony that if she (Miss Dickinson) had to pay the note she would proclaim the fact from sea to sea. Miss Dickinson again forced many of the spectators to tears by her evidence.

He engaged in ship building when twenty-one years old, and in 1865 he began the manufacture of agricultural implements. Of late years he made a fortune in peach and fruit baskets. He married Miss Sarah Sirman in 1840, who, with three sons, survives him. William Thorp Watson now becomes governor of Delaware. He is a grandson of Governor William Watson. The new governor has been a prominent democrat for years.

AMERICAN SHOES IN ENGLAND.

An Opportunity for Our Manufacturers To Open Up a New Market.

Washington, April 9.—The department of state is in receipt of a letter from Minister Bayard at London in regard to disorders in the boot and shoe trade in England. "As a consequence of the trouble," he says, "American productions are enabled to establish their superiority in the market, and, owing to the admission of raw hides and skins free of duty, and to untrammeled resort to labor-aiding machinery, the enterprise and industry of our citizens engaged in the preparation of leather and the manufacture of boots and shoes in the United States is finding profitable remuneration in foreign markets, as well as at home." A newspaper article inclosed by Minister Bayard states an English shoe manufacturer, who has received a consignment of American shoes, found that they were delivered free at his warehouse door at a lower cost than that at which he could produce them at his own factory. He could sell ten times as many of that class of goods as of any other, and customers would not know them from goods of English make.

This is the first German parish the ablegate has officially visited since he came to America, and it is also his first visit to the anthracite coal region.

ADMIRAL MEADE'S SQUADRON.

Port au Prince To Be Visited Instead of Port Limon.

Washington, April 9.—Rear Admiral Meade's squadron sailed yesterday from Kingston, Jamaica, for Port au Prince, Hayti. All of the vessels of the squadron accompanied the flagship except the Cincinnati, which went to Port Antonio, probably for fruit. This movement is a radical departure from the itinerary arranged for the squadron by the terms of which it was due at Port Limon, Costa Rica, yesterday, but it is said at the navy department that no significance attaches to the change.

The Hova works, near Tamatave, were bombarded by French cruisers on April 4. The forts feebly replied to the fire of the ships.

OUT FOR ANNEXATION

Hawaiian Natives' Only Plan To Get Relief.

All Other Efforts Against the Present Government Have Failed—Its Overthrow Is Predicted—Sad Scene at the Dock as the Political Prisoners Were Departing.

San Francisco, April 9.—Correspondence from Honolulu per steamer Peru, just arrived, contains the following information: Local business is improved by the disbursement of the pay of the home guards. The ruling powers are relaxing somewhat from their recent severity. Those connected with the suppressed newspapers have been released under detective surveillance.

Cry for Annexation.

An annexation meeting has just been held by the league contrary to the desire of the officials. The speakers openly advocated the overthrow of the men in power, charged them with being upheld by bayonets, declared they impoverished the natives, protested against the recent restrictive statutes, and stated that Hawaii having tried foreign intervention and civil war all in vain, must now rid herself of the yoke by annexation.

Weakness of Present Government.

From widely diverse points of view, representative men of all parties say that the present government cannot maintain itself another year, that no republic is possible, and that bayonet rule against the consent of the governed must fail, besides which there are serious financial problems unsolved. The absence of Minister Damon may portend a foreign loan.

Did Lil Refuse a Pardon?

The queen is still treated well. The government press gives currency to the rumor that she will be released. Her friends believe she has refused a proffered pardon unless the amnesty is made far more general. There is much unfavorable comment on the death of ex-Attorney General Pettersen, caused by two month's imprisonment without trial and exile to a cold climate, although he, in common with half those arrested, took no part in the revolt.

A Touching Scene.

The most exciting event has just occurred in the departure to another and distant island of thirty-four natives. They were educated, intelligent men, but were sent to labor with criminals on the roads, because sympathy was being daily proffered them in Honolulu. More than two thousand persons witnessed the transportation, which was closely watched by government sharpshooters in citizens' dress. Marshal Hitchcock went with them. When the steamer started all the natives raised their voices in wild, wailing death songs, such as have never been heard except in ancient days or at the burial of a chieftain. The prisoners sang Hawaiian hymns until out of hearing.

Preparations are actively making to defend the city, and torpedoes are being placed in the river to prevent the enemy's ships from ascending.

Terrible Mine Explosion.

San Francisco, April 9.—A special dispatch from New Whatcom, Wash., says: News of a terrible explosion in the Blue Canon coal mine reached here this morning. There were 25 or 30 men in the mine at time of the explosion. Ten dead bodies had been taken out up to the time the word was sent, and it is supposed that the rest of the miners have met death. The mine is on Lake Whatcom, nearly ten miles from Whatcom.

Every Joint in His Body Racked by Rheumatism.

Could Not Move His Arm and Was in Constant Pain—A True Story of a Remarkable Cure.

Wm. F. Maier, 18 Park place, Zanesville, Ohio, says: "About a year ago I had to quit work on account of rheumatism. I had the disease in my hips, back and arms in fact, in every joint in my body. The pain was intense, and I suffered the most excruciating agony. My doctor could not do anything for me, and I tried every remedy that could be suggested; none of them did me any good, and finally my joints became stiffened and sore. At times I could not move my right arm, and was in constant pain. I procured a bottle of Munyon's Rheumatism Cure, and within a short while was completely cured. I am free from stiffness and pain and can cheerfully recommend Munyon's Remedy is the best I have ever known.

"THAT DEATHLY FEELING."

People Often Speak of Having "Deathly Sensations."

WHAT ARE THE ACTUAL SENSATIONS OF DEATH?

Are There Really Any Feelings of Pain When Death Comes?

Everybody has heard or used the expression, "that deathly sensation."

By it is meant the awful sinking sensation—the feeling of terrible dropping away from us, as it were, of vitality, as the life principle wanes and ebbs toward death.

Death itself is doubtless painless, but the awful sinking sensation which precedes death has been described as worse than pain.

Nervous people frequently have this dreadful feeling, and many who have been through the experience, will recognize at once the graphic description of Mrs. B. J. Stockwell, of Waitsfield, Vt., who says.

"I had complete nervous prostration, and was confined to the bed most of the time for two years. It took the form of mania, and I thought I must soon die. It began as nervousness and kept growing worse.

"I was unable to do any work. There were times, when for a week, I did not sleep hardly any. When I got up I was more exhausted than when I went to bed. I had a terrible deathly sensation, worse than any pain.

"My stomach was terribly weak, and my food distressed me constantly. I was completely prostrated. I paid large sums of money for doctors and treatment but they did me no good.

"I employed the best medical advice in this State and New York, but got no better. Then we saw Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy advertised, and I determined to try it.

MRS. B. J. STOCKWELL.

"I had not used one bottle before I felt better. I continued to steadily improve under its use. I am now a well, healthy woman, able to do my own work. I have good digestion and appetite, sleep well and am always cheerful.

"This is what Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy has done for me I heartily recommend it to everybody. It is a wonderful medicine."

The whole world is amazed at what is being done by Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. Nothing like it has never been known before. It makes the nerves strong as steel, the blood pure and rich, the skin soft and beautiful and gives to the eyes that brightness and sparkle which indicate perfect health.

There are thousands upon thousands of weak, nervous people, depressed in mind and debilitated in body particularly at this season of the year, who can be made strong and well by this splendid remedy. It will be found the best spring medicine that one can take, for nothing so quickly and surely gives strength of nerve, invigoration of blood and healthful action of all the organs as Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy.

NO EXTRA SESSION

The President Sees No Necessity for It.

Income Tax Decision a Disappointment to the Administration, But Instructions Will Be Issued at Once to Collectors To Conform to the Emasculated Law.

Washington, April 9.—The president, on being asked whether, in view of the decision of the supreme court on the income tax law, an extra session of congress would be called, said that neither he nor the secretary of the treasury saw any necessity for such action, and that unless there was an unexpected change in conditions, he had no idea that congress would meet again before the time appointed for its regular session.

Carlisle Summoned.

The president was informed of the decision shortly after it was rendered and he at once summoned Secretary Carlisle to the executive mansion and the two discussed the matter for some time. Other members of the cabinet dropped in later, among them the attorney-general.

Administration Disappointed.

The decision was a disappointment, but the administration will at once issue instructions to collectors of internal revenue to conform to the emasculated law. Secretary Carlisle followed his well defined custom not to discuss the matter for publication. Attorney-General Olney said the government would not ask for a rehearing, but would accept the decision as rendered.

Getting the Machinery in Order.

Commissioner Miller and the officials of the income tax division held a conference of several hours' duration at the treasury discussing the bearing of the opinion on the present income tax machinery in operation and changing it where necessary to meet the changed condition. These instructions will probably be ready for publication to-morrow or next day.

VOID IN TWO SECTIONS.

Poll of the Supreme Court on the Income Tax Law.

Washington, April 9.—The following is the poll of the United States supreme court on the various questions of the income tax law: On the constitutionality of levying on rents, Chief Justice Fuller, Field, Gray, Brown, Brewer and Shiras against. White and Harlan in its favor. On the constitutionality of a tax on the income from municipal and state bonds all the members of the court except White voted in the negative.

Justice Field Alone Against It.

Mr. Justice Field was against the whole act alone. On the question of whether the other provisions are valid in view of the unconstitutionality of a part of the law, the court was equally divided. Besides the majority opinion on the unconstitutionality of the two sections referred to, which was read by Chief Justice Fuller, three other opinions were rendered, one by Mr. Justice Field to the effect that the whole law was unconstitutional, another by Mr. Justice White disagreeing with him in toto, and a third opinion by Mr. Justice Harlan, who differed with the majority of the court on the subject of rentals from real estate, the tax on which he held to be constitutional.

Outlook Uncertain.

Other suits will be brought to test the balance of the law. The outlook is all uncertainty, but the government will proceed with the collection of those taxes which have not been touched upon. The returns will begin on April 15, but payment is not mandatory until the end of the fiscal year, June 30.

THE COUNTESS RUSSELL'S SUIT.

She Does Not Believe the Charges Made Against Her Husband.

London, April 9.—The case of Countess Russell against her husband for restitution of her conjugal rights was continued yesterday. The countess was placed in the witness box and she testified that the Dowager Countess Russell and Lady Agatha Russell told her about her husband's disgraceful conduct. The dowager countess said that Rollo Russell had advised the earl to blow out his own brains. Countess Russell said that she did not now believe the charge which had been made about her husband.

For a Land-Locked Harbor.

New Haven, Conn., April 9.—The head of the Hartford company, which for some months has been dredging a large canal from the great salt pond in the interior of Block island, states that the work will be done in June. It will admit steamers to a land-locked harbor containing 800 acres of navigable water.

Boston's Sub-Treasury.

Boston, April 9.—The experts who have been counting the money at the sub-treasury have finished their labor after a week's work. They find that the money in the vaults on the first of the month was twenty cents in excess of the amount called for by the books.

A Victim of Burglars Paralyzed.

Bridgeton, April 9.—Miss Martha Brown, one of the aged sisters, who, two weeks ago, were beaten, gagged and robbed by masked robbers, is suffering from paralysis at her home in Hopewell township as a result of the treatment which she received.

To Pay the Rentals.

Boston, April 9.—Judge Colt, in the United States circuit court, has authorized receivers Platt and Perry of the New York & New England railroad company to pay the rentals on the roads under lease to that company.

Olneyville Mill Situation.

Providence, R. I., April 9.—There is no change in the situation at the mills at Olneyville. All hands will continue at work until authorized by the union to quit which will probably be to-morrow.

To Complete the Capitol Building.

Albany, April 9.—The senate finance committee will to-day report favorably for the completion of the capitol building by contract.

Flood at Troy.

Troy, N. Y., April 9.—The river is rising rapidly here and is over the docks in some places.

INSURGENT OUTBREAKS IN CUBA

Excitement in Havana Checked in the Nick of Time.

Havana, April 9.—Reports of insurgent outbreaks have been numerous in the last three days. As far as can be learned, however, no battle has been fought. The province of Santiago de Cuba is still the most restless part of the island. General La Chambre, who commands the Spanish troops in active pursuit of the insurgents in this province, has been at Palma Soriano, to the northeast and across the mountains from Santiago city, for several days. He operates from this base in the near-by districts which are overrun frequently by insurgent bands.

Rebels Seize the Mails.

A report received from him last evening says that a party of 180 insurgents attacked the San Leandro postman and his guards in the morning, overpowered them before revolvers could be drawn and seized the mails. Before liberating their captives the insurgents cut the telegraph wires. A government force is pursuing the band.

Captured Rebel Lieutenant Shot.

Gen. La Chambre also reports that insurgents under the leadership of Rabi and Lara have been cutting the Ventas-Casanova wires. Small parties of troops have pursued them, but have caught only one man. He was one of Rabi's lieutenants and was shot. The province of Puerto Principe is quiet.

Uneasy Feeling at Havana.

Everything is quiet round Havana, although rumors of coming trouble are plenty enough. Yesterday the police found eight white men and three negroes marching with an insurgent flag about eight miles from the city. All eleven were armed with revolvers and knives. They were captured without bloodshed.

Lucky Move of the Government.

They admitted that they had intended to form a band to attack the barracks of the civil guard at Jaruco, a considerable town on the railway between Havana and Mantanzas. If the government had not been enabled by early information to check this movement there undoubtedly would have been a rising which would have had serious results in this city.

Many Killed and Wounded.

Madrid, April 9.—The official dispatches from Cuba continue to report many skirmishes between insurgents and troops. Col. Salcedo is said to have routed a large insurgent force near Holguin, killing and wounding many.

Suspicious of Uncle Sam.

The decision of the government to buy from the United States the gunboats needed to complete the squadron in Cuban waters is condemned by many influential politicians, who are convinced that the insurrection gets secret encouragement and support from Washington.

SNOW-BOUND IN THE WEST.

Many Passenger Trains More Than Forty-eight Hours Late.

Denver, April 9.—Belated travelers from the east report that the recent storm through Kansas was the worst ever known in that section. Many of the passenger trains are now more than forty-eight hours late and are battling with snow and sand on the prairie. Superintendent Bogard, of the Union Pacific, with headquarters at Cheyenne Wells, has a large force of men clearing the tracks. In places within sixty or seventy miles of Denver the snow was found in drifts from thirty to forty feet deep, being near the tops of telegraph poles in some instances.

A NOBLEMAN'S DAUGHTER.

Austria's Envoy to Tokio Marries a Japanese Woman.

London, April 9.—The Central News Correspondent in Vienna says that Count Coudenhove, Austrian envoy to Tokio, has married the daughter of a Japanese nobleman. She is a Buddhist, but will soon become a Catholic. The Austrian government is informed that Corea intends to send envoys, after the war, to Europe and America to notify the governments of her independence and seek to conclude treaties of commerce.

NORWAY AND SWEDEN.

Unusual Amounts Asked To Be Used for Warlike Purposes.

Christiania, April 9.—The estimates which are to be submitted to the storthing give fresh impetus to the rumors of an impending war between Norway and Sweden. The estimates far exceed any previous sums required. Four million krorer is to be voted to construct ironclads, and large credits will be asked for the purchase of munitions of war and for the completion of the forts of Tonsberg harbor.

Return of Major William Ludlow.

London, April 9.—Major William Ludlow, the United States military attache here, will sail for New York on Saturday next on the steamship Berlin and will go immediately to Washington to receive his final instructions as a member of the Nicaragua canal board.

An Old Landmark Burned.

Hartford, Conn., April 9.—The Barber homestead at Windsor, built in 1640 by Thomas Barber, who settled in Windsor in 1635 and has always been owned by the same family, was burned yesterday.

WHAT THEY THINK OF IT

Prominent Views on the Income Tax Decision.

Senator Hill Is Gratified—Sure the Whole Act Will Eventually Be Declared Unconstitutional — Chauncey Depew Says It Is a Nice Law—Henry George Denounces It.

Washington, April 9.—Senator Hill of New York, who more than any one else antagonized the enactment of the income tax into law when it was before the senate, was an interested spectator and close listner in the court room when the opinion was handed down yesterday.

Hill Is Gratified.

"I am naturally gratified," said Senator Hill to a United Press representative, "at the decision of the court by a vote of 6 to 2, on two important questions involved in the act. They are both questions I had carefully considered and vigorously pressed in the senate among other objections to the law. For myself, I have never had any doubt that the tax imposed by the income tax law, is a direct tax in all its features, and, hence, an unconstitutional tax. I naturally think the opinions of Justices Fuller and Field are very able and convincing and will receive the approval of the bar throughout the United States.

Class Legislation of the Worst Kind.

"There never was any good reason for the enactment of the income tax law. It was pressed upon congress by a lot of populists, socialists, cranks and disturbers and their views were unwisely adopted. It was class legislation of the worst kind. From a political point of view it was the height of folly to adopt legislation of that character.

Excellent for the Country.

"The effect of the decision will, in my judgment, be excellent for the country. I have no question but that the whole act will eventually be declared unconstitutional. The first act of the next congress should be to repeal the law and atone for our blunder; unfortunately the republicans will get the benefit of the repeal. It would be the most supreme folly on the part of the democratic party to maintain an income tax law now, when some of its principal features have already been declared to be unconstitutional."

OPINIONS IN NEW YORK.

Views of Chauncey Depew, Henry George and Others.

New York, April 9.—The announcement of the result of the decision of the supreme court in the income tax law created something of a stir in this city and many bankers, brokers, capitalists and professional men gave their opinions on the subject.

A Nice Law, Says Chauncey Depew.

Chauncey M. Depew, president of the New York Central railroad, said he thought the decision, so far as it applies to real estate, was an excellent law. "Under the decision," he went on, "the capitalist who derives all his income from tenement houses, flat houses, hotels and the like is not required to pay a dollar of taxes. The unfortunate man who rents places from him, however, but who makes his living in a different way, is taxed heavily. That is a nice law."

Views of Judge Dillon.

Judge John F. Dillon said: "This will be the turning point in the minds of many people who have been undecided whether to buy municipal or railroad bonds. It will add very much to the desirability of municipal bonds when people know they are not subject to taxation. It will not effect the railroads especially, I think. The sustaining of the court's decision in the matter of the income tax seems to me quite constitutional and I expected it."

Henry Clews Deplores the Decision.

"It is a most unfortunate decision," said Henry Clews. "The tax will now be paid with a feeling that it is unconstitutional and will be given under protest in the hope that it will eventually be returned. The courts should have been either overwhelmingly on one side or the other, and then there would have been confidence in the decision. It is dispiriting for the hardworking people to have to pay a tax on their income while the Astors pay nothing on their inherited wealth."

Preposterous, Says Henry George.

Henry George: "In my opinion that part of the court that held the law to be unconstitutional is right. As the income tax now practically stands, it is even more preposterous than it was as originally passed."

Hetty Green Believes It All Wrong.

Mrs. Hetty Green, the richest woman in America, when told of the news from Washington, said: "They should have declared the whole bill unconstitutional. It's all wrong, every bit of it. We have too many taxes as it is."

Chess by Telegraph.

Boston, April 9.—The chess players of Boston, through the Boston press club, have addressed a challenge to chess players of New York, through the Manhattan chess club, for a team match by telegraph, eight players on a side, for a stake of $100 within thirty days from date.

London, April 9.—The editor of Fair Play was fined £50 for contempt of court in commenting upon the action of Dr. W. Conyers Herring of New York against the Marine Insurance company regarding the burning of the schooner yacht Mohican.

Death of an Italian Ambassador.

Power of the Future.

The coming household will be run by electricity. The electricity will be stored in nice little jars or cells and left at the house each morning, just as milk is nowadays.

"Johnnie, run round the corner and buy 4 cents' worth of electricity to rock the cradle with," the coming mother will say to the young small boy, and, "Oh, Johnnie, if you're going out I want you to get about 10 cents' worth of electricity to run the sewing machine with," his big sister will call after him, while as he scurries out the back way the cook will probably observe, "Be yez goin' out? Well, it's some more electricity that I'm after wantin' to grind the coffee with."

That is, if there be a cook in the coming household. From present electrical indications it wouldn't be surprising if the entire retinue of domestics would be some day usurped by a set of lay figures, who will automatically perform their several duties simply by some Edisonian magic.

THE KNOW NOTHING PARTY.

Sprung Out of an Oath Bound Order in This City.

The American party sprung out of a secret and oath bound order that was formed in New York for the avowed purpose of checking the influence of foreign born voters, purifying the ballot box and keeping the Bible in the public schools. In the city of New York, where voters of alien birth had become influential, the order flourished exceedingly, and when it was extended to other States it attracted many on whom party obligations sat lightly, while the old parties were either breaking up or undergoing a purging process.

The Democratic party had generally been in favor of easy naturalization. The term of residence requisite to lawful naturalization, at first fixed at two years, was extended in 1795 to five years; the Federalists, in 1798, stretched this to fourteen years, but in 1802 the Democratic Republicans cut it down to five years. Men who left the Democratic party because of its domination by foreign voters, or who dropped out of the Whig party when it began to show signs of decay, now found an asylum in the American party.

The American party flourished exceedingly in 1852, and reached its meridian greatness in 1855, when it obtained a considerable foothold in the South and carried important elections in the New England States, California, Kentucky, Texas and New York, and showed great strength in Virginia, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana. The party made preparations for entering the Presidential contest of 1856, and actually did set its standard in the field; but the rising tide of opposition to the further extension of slavery eventually swamped the organization, and it finally went under, long before the breaking out of the war of the rebellion.—Scribner.

Presence of Mind Saved Her.

A young woman of South Second street was curling her hair over a gasolene lamp, a night or two ago, when the oil caught fire. The curling iron was dropped on the floor, and the flames from the burning oil set fire to and destroyed a lace curtain nearby. The girl's hair was also singed, but from her presence of mind the fire which set the lace curtain in a blaze, was extinguished and the damage was therefore trifling.

W. Jennings Demorest, editor, publisher and orator, died at his home, 21 East Fifty-seventh street, New York, of pneumonia, at 2 this morning.

RHEUMATISM PREVALENT.

Should Be Arrested in Its Early Stages

Probably there is no disease that inflicts so much continuous pain as rheumatism. When it becomes chronic, there are few so hard to cure. The disease is caused by an impure state of the blood. The impurity consists of an excess of lethic acid, and to drive this acid from the blood is the object of all rational treatment.

The medical faculty have found in Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, a certain and positive cure for this terrible complaint. Mrs. M. Hill, of Galeton, Pa., in writing of her experience with Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, says: "One year ago I was taken with muscular rheumatism. My limbs were so painful that I could scarcely walk. I determined to try Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, and before I had used the third bottle the pain was all gone."

Favorite Remedy cures chronic, acute or imflammatory rheumatism; and in all diseases brought about by impure blood, or an excess of acid in the blood, such as urinary troubles, dyspepsia, constipation, kidney or liver complaints, it is a well-known specific.

EGYPTOLOGY FOR CHICAGO.

The New Professor for Its University Returns to Begin His Work.

Dr. James H. Braisted, who is to fill the newly established chair of Egyptology at the Chicago University, has returned after an absence from this country of more than three and a half years. This time has been spent in special study for his new work.

According to Dr. Braisted the subject has never before been taught in any of the colleges in this country, and he will be the first American to begin a regular course of lectures on Egyptology. In 1893 a chair of Egyptology was established in England, but it was not until six months ago that the final provisions were made for one in this country.

In the fall of 1891, after receiving the degree of M. A. from Yale, Dr. Braisted went to Germany, where he took a course in Egyptology at the University of Berlin, being the first American to receive the degree of Ph. D. in that subject. After completing his course at the university he started on an extended trip through Egypt and up the Nile.

Engaging a dahabiyeh, or Arabian cabin sail boat, he went from Cairo up the Nile to the first cataract, a distance of 600 miles. During the voyage, which lasted more than two months, he obtained many valuable specimens of ancient Egyptian art. These will be sent to the Museum of Egyptology at the Chicago University.

"During my journey," said he yesterday, "I was fortunate enough to obtain some priceless ancient pottery of the Great period, some alabasters and five Egyptian mummies, one of which is thought to be that of a very ancient Egyptian priest, and upon which may possibly be found some valuable manuscript.

"I had the rare opportunity of being the guest of Dr. Petrie, the most distinguished excavator of the present time, who had a camp on the west shore of the Nile, about thirty-five miles from Thebes.

"During my stay with him we made some interesting examinations of old tombs, and he has promised to send me a valuable collection of ancient pottery excavated at Coptos last winter, which will be placed in the museum at the university. With the exception of a few days spent in excavating near Thebes, I devoted all of my time to the collecting of subjects with which to illustrate my lectures. I was in Egypt about six months."

Dr. Braisted said that it was his purpose after getting his work at the university well under way to return to Egypt and begin a work of excavation and relic hunting on a large scale. Several wealthy men in Chicago are interested in the subject, he said, and it is possible that a party of students under his charge may within the next year or two continue the work.

200 WORDS A MINUTE.

A Telegraph Typewriting Machine Tried in Baltimore.

The United States Postal Printing Company has opened an office in Baltimore and announces that in a few days it will be ready to receive messages from Washington. The company says that by means of apparatus invented by J. H. Rogers, of Hyattsville, it will be able to send messages at the rate of 200 words a minute, the receiving machine at the other end doing the printing. The company has now completed a line to Washington along the pike, and will soon extend it to Philadelphia, New York and Boston.

A test of the Washington line was made to the satisfaction of the company. It is proposed to send an entire letter for what is charged ordinarily for ten words. The company can just as well send 200 words as ten words. The apparatus consists of a typewriter on which to prepare the message, a transmitter with which to send it and a printing machine on which to receive it. When the typewriter operator hits a letter on the machine it punches holes in a tape running through a wheel. After the message is all punched the tape is run through a brush composed of small styluses through which the current is passing. The paper breaks the connection, but it is restored when a stylus comes to one of the holes.

The receiver is constructed on the typewriter principle, but instead of having each letter on a separate rod for striking the paper there are only eight rods. It is intended to supply business men with the attachment to typewriters for punching holes in the tape. They can dictate correspondence in their offices, after which the tape may be rolled up, taken to the telegraph office and a letter of 200 words sent for what an ordinary telegram costs.

He Didn't Pause.

A clergyman in a West End church announced the banns the other Sunday in a manner calculated to lead to a breach of promise action. He forgot to perform the duty at the proper time, much to the chagrin of the affianced couple, who attended church specially to hear their names read out. The reverend gentleman remembered the omission before entering the pulpit to preach and accordingly he took the banns book with him. The result was that he announced:

"I publish the banns of marriage between John M——, widower, and Elizabeth N——, spinster."

And without a pause or introduction of any kind he then read out the text of his sermon:

SPECIAL!

Our advertisement only deals with facts and the truth, and as a New York advertiser lately said, "Respectable merchants don't consider it wicked to lie in the newspaper, and if liars would only stop advertising, or advertisers stop lieing, there would be some fun in business!" On Friday, April 5, we bought a bill of goods from the receiver's sale of E. S Jaffray & Co, and were informed by them that we were the only house in Plainfield that had bought any of the goods since the receivers were appointed. They were closed on Saturday and did not sell any goods as they were behind on shipping. Goods bought there yesterday would in the regular way arrive in Plainfield about Friday, April 12. We expect our goods on Thursday.

IN THE TRANSVAAL.

WILLIAM MURRAY GRAYDON.

Tired of Africa? Bless you, no; it's the greatest country on the face of the globe. I'm going to dear old England one of these days, just to see how it looks. But I won't stay long. Like as not I'll be back to the colony on the next ship.

Did I come out here with money in my pocket? Not a bit of it. I landed with about as many coppers as a baby could hold in its hand. How did I get a start? Ah, that's a story in itself. A man's prosperity always has a beginning somewhere, especially if he plays in hard luck at first. That's what I did, sir, and the turning point came about through a pretty ugly adventure. Though it happened years ago, it seems like last week. I dream of it now and then nights and wake up in a cold sweat.

Yes, I'll spin you the yarn if you care to hear it. Dinner won't be ready before an hour, so light a fresh cigar. I think I will try one myself. These came from England and they have the flavor of the ones I used to pay a shilling apiece for. I was a reckless youngster in those days and I dare say I was a bit wild. But what else would you expect? My parents were dead and I had no kith nor kin. There was a tidy fortune waiting for me to come of age and my guardian—an old lawyer chap of Gray's Inn—gave me a big-gish allowance. I was eighteen when I went down to Cambridge, where I fell in with a loose crew. It was little I had to do with books, as you can imagine, but I worried along into the second year, and then something happened that saved the university the trouble of dropping me.

My guardian went all to smash. It seems he had been a company promoter or something of that sort, and by rash speculations he lost my fortune and every penny of his own. He hadn't a stiver left, as the bankruptcy court found when it got through with him. Hard lines for me? You're right; and the worst of it was that I was about as fit as a baby to earn my own living. I had been brought up on a silver spoon, so to speak.

But it was work or starve and the pinch brought out my manhood and grit. I got a beggarly clerkship in the Great Western railway office. It was a dingy place and the drudgery was something awful. I was pretty near despair in those days, but I was kept up by the hope of getting out to South Africa, where fortunes were said to be made every day. I resigned as soon as I had saved enough money for a passage, and when I went aboard the Cape liner at Southampton I had just one shilling and sixpence in my pocket.

Well, I landed at Port Natal, and presto! My dreams of wealth vanished. There happened to be a wave of hard times in the colony just then and everybody was grumbling. Gold was said to be plentiful up country, but I had no means of getting there. I knocked about for a day or two and when my last copper was gone I was lucky enough to run across the proverbial friend in need. He was an Englishman named John Garwood—a big, red bearded chap, with the build of an ox. I soon saw that he was close fisted and hard at a bargain, though it turned out afterward that his heart was in the right place.

It wasn't much of a chance that he offered me, though I was mighty glad to take him up. He had been in the colony for several years and so far had met with poor success. But he was going to stake his little all on a search for gold away up beyond the Transvaal, and as I had nothing to chip in for a partnership he agreed to take me as a hired helper. I was to get a few shillings a month, whether we struck it rich or poor. It was a one sided contract, but I was not in the position to kick. Garwood's outfit consisted of a seasoned wagon and eight strong bullocks, a tent, two rifles, a brace of revolvers and a lot of mining tools. For driver he hired a wizened and tough little Hottentot, who was about forty years old and knew every part of the colony. I took a mistrust to Janka from the first, for he had a wicked eye that could never look one straight in the face. He was a fair blacksmith and wagonwright, a dead shot and an untiring hunter. Garwood had picked him up at Pietermaritzberg, and he admitted that he had a reputation for impudence and laziness.

"Don't you worry," he said to me before we started. "I know how to manage these blacks. Janka is too valuable to part with and as long as I am his master he will behave like a faithful dog."

"I don't deny it," I replied. "You know the ropes out here and I'm only a green hand. But his looks are against him."

So we three started north, and I won't tire you with an account of the long journey. At the end of two months we crossed the Limpopo river and the Transvaal was behind us. Ahead was a wild and beautiful country, but little known in those days. Half of our bullocks died on the way and we had purchased fresh ones from the Boer settlers.

Garwood was as fearless a man as ever lived, and though it was a daring and foolhardy thing to do, we pushed right on into the land of the Matabeles. You know what lively scrimmages the Chartered Company have been having there lately. At that time the savages were more bitter toward white men than now, and we located our camp in the safest place we could find. It was part way up a little valley and in among thick timber. There were tall mountains right and left and a bit of a stream brawled by the tent.

And if you'll believe me, sir, that stream turned out to be chock full of gold. I could hardly find it to-day and I reckon no one else has stumbled on it yet. Ah, what a time we had! Garwood and I cradled the pools from morning to night and the canvas bag of shiny nuggets grew heavier and heavier. And it all belonged to him by the terms of the contract. I felt pretty sore, I can tell you, yet I worked on and kept my mouth shut. So did Garwood, and I calculated he would drive his bargain to the last letter. If I misjudged him it was not because I had no reasons. You see, he was a grum, close mouthed sort of chap, and it was all work and sleep with us. No pipes and cheery talks around the supper fire. How was I to guess that he had a kindly heart under his crusty shell? Why, I never saw a man so changed as he was that morning. Bless me, I'm getting ahead of my story. Beg ing your pardon, sir, I'll turn back. It was a month, more or less, that we stayed in that lonely nook of Matabeleland.

Every night there was a fresh heap of nuggets to shovel into the bag. No savages came near us and we saw no trace of any. We lived royally, for the Hottentot was a rare good hunter. A couple of times a week he would bring in a fat deer or a lot of birds. Of course we had a supply of biscuits, coffee and such things. And Janka was on his good behavior, I'm bound to say. He was as meek as a lamb and when he sometimes saw us fingering the gold he would look at it stupidly and carelessly, as though the shiny nuggets were no more to him than so much dirt. Ah, he was a cunning rogue, if ever there was one.

One night when the canvas bag was so full that we could hardly tie the mouth shut a queer thing happened. We got awake in the morning to find our two rifles gone. They had been carried off from our very sides. We hunted all round, but it was no use. Garwood knew mighty little of spooring and I knew less, so we had to rely on Janka. The Hottentot had a ready solution for the mystery. He pretended to discover signs of naked feet in the trampled grass around the tent and declared that two savages had stolen the rifles in the night. Then he crept off into the jungle like a cat, promising to track the thieves and intimating that he might bring our property back before evening. Naturally we had little hope of that. I suspected the black scamp, though I don't know just why. I hinted as much to Garwood, but he only laughed at me. Then he looked sober and said that the Matabeles had likely stolen the rifles to make us defenseless and would be coming to take our lives next. It was fair reasoning and I more than half agreed with him.

We counted it lucky that our revolvers were left. They had likely escaped attention, being fastened to our belts while we slept. We loaded them carefully before we trudged up the stream to where we were working. We did not do much that morning, owing to a heavy sense of danger that damped our spirits. We watched and listened a good bit in between the cradling, and at dinner time, finding we had forgotten to bring our lunch, we struck back to camp.

Janka reached the tent just as we did, only from the opposite direction. He looked fagged out and his feet and body were scratched by thorns. He was empty handed, except for his customary spear.

"Where are our rifles?" Garwood asked sharply. "You are a pretty fellow to send after thieves."

"They had too much start, Baas," said the Hottentot in a sullen tone. "Vultures on the wing could not have overtaken them. I followed their spoor to a Matabele kraal back yonder," pointing to the west. "The dogs of thieves had entered the gate. I lay hid close by in the bushes and listened. I heard much talk and saw many things. At noonday all the fighting warriors of the kraal will start for the white men's camp to slay them. They will be here by the falling of the sun."

Janka looked us straight in the eye as he spoke. His words and manner bore the stamp of truth. Though I believed him capable of any villainy, I would have sworn that now he was not lying.

"How many are coming?" demanded Garwood, paling under his bronze skin.

The Hottentot lifted both hands and rapidly closed and opened his fingers a dozen times. "That many, Baas."

"It's safe to count on half a hundred," muttered Garwood, turning to me. "We're dead men if we stay here, aye, and we're as good as dead anyway, for these blacks will track us like fiends. It's a slim chance."

"But worth the trying," I replied. "If we start at once we can cover a good many miles by evening. The oxen are in prime condition."

Garwood nodded. "We're leaving a dozen fortunes behind," he said, glancing regretfully at the stream.

"And taking one with us," I said.

He looked sharply at me for a couple of seconds, and I knew he was asking himself if I expected a share of the gold. I had not meant it that way, and I blushed with confusion. Then he understood, and his eyes dropped.

"We'll be off at once," he said. "Our only chance is to keep ahead of the Matabele until we reach the Limpopo." With that we fell to work. Janka lent us a hand, but every now and then he was taken with a fit of shivering. Either he was mortally scared for his life or it was the finest bit of acting I ever saw.

Well, we got off in short order, and as soon as we were clear of the valley the bullocks went rattling over the grassy veldt with the wagon swaying and bouncing behind. Garwood and I lay in the rear end watching every hill crest and clump of scrub, and listening to the crack of the Hottentot's whip.

But to make a long story short, the Matabele did not show up. We traveled hard all of that night and well into the next forenoon, before we ventured on a few hours' halt. We were off again at sunset, and two days later we sighted the Limpopo and crossed at a fording.

We felt safe now and were even a little ashamed of our hasty flight. But we did not dream of going back; we had quite enough of the perilous country of the Matabeles. We took our time on the long journey through the Transvaal, heading in a direct route for Port Natal. From what few words Garwood let fall I surmised that he was going home to England with his fortune. I felt pretty big over my own prospects. The wages that were due me would last but a short time after reaching the coast, and if the times were still dull I might have trouble in finding employment. I'm afraid I had some bitterness toward Garwood, for I knew he had driven a hard bargain with me. He was as glum as ever and we found each other's company pretty monotonous.

We had pushed on after sunset because the Vaal river was not far ahead, and we hoped to outspan there before midnight. Garwood was squatted in Dutch fashion against the tailboard, smoking the last crumbs from his tobacco box. I was stretched across the bed of the wagon, directly behind the driver's seat. My head was pillowed on the bag of nuggets and my eyes were half closed. Twice I saw Janka give me a quick glance over his shoulder, and when he did it the third time my old mistrust came to life again. I lay still, peeping from under my eyelids and wondering what it meant. That was where I made a mistake, though I can't say that I regret it.

All at once Janka swung around and swift as lightning jerked my revolver out of my belt. With a twist of his hand he reversed the weapon and brought the butt heavily down on my forehead. Though dizzy with pain I gave a loud cry and struggled to my knees. I saw Garwood spring up, reaching for his pistol, and just then the Hottentot fired. The ball sang by my ear and Garwood threw up his arms and fell backward out of the end of the wagon.

I staggered to my feet, and, whipping out my hunting knife, faced Janka as he thrust the pistol into my face and pulled the trigger. The chamber either missed fire or was empty, and before I could take advantage of the opportunity the wiry little Hottentot dropped the weapon and jumped squarely down on me.

"The gold! The gold!" he screamed shrilly. "It is all mine, Baas, for you are a dead man."

I was accounted pretty strong in those days, but the dizzy crack on the head had put me at a disadvantage. Moreover, I had lost the knife. As I went down I gripped the Hottentot as best I could, and for a couple of minutes we threshed over the wagonbed locked tightly together. I was growing weaker all the time, and I gave myself up for lost. Janka was crazy with rage and greed and his skinny muscles were like iron. His purpose was to get at my throat and throttle me. The bullocks were moving slowly, but all at once they bellowed and broke into a gallop, and I heard the roar of a lion off to one side. The wagon began to sway and pitch furiously, and Janka and I were flung from side to side.

What came after that is a bit hazy. In a minute, like a flash the wagon was over on its side, and I heard the bag of nuggets rip through the hood. The Hottentot was undermost now, but I was too weak to hold him there. He would soon have twisted loose, I'll warrant, only he didn't get the chance. The wagon had been bumping along on its side and of a sudden it took a header down a stony bank. There was rushing water at the bottom, and into it we went—wagon, bullocks and all. I was clean under before I could open my mouth, and I had sense enough then to hold my breath and kick. The current must have washed me out of the end of the wagon, for I came to the top of the river—it was the Vaal, as you have likely guessed—and saw the shore a little way off. I gained it by swimming and wading, climbed up the bluff to a patch of grass, and fell down in a dead faint.

It was early dawn when I came to, and I felt pretty chipper, except for the painful bump on my head. The river was a yellow flood, and there was no sign of bullocks, wagon or Janka. I was a little below the top of the bank, and when I scrambled up I was the most surprised and delighted man you ever saw. The bag of nuggets lay a few yards off, and standing beside it was John Garwood. He had a bloody bandage around his head, and I took him for a ghost at first.

"I thought you were dead!" I cried.

"It was a close shave," he answered, "but the bullet only plowed my scalp. I've been lying back here on the veldt all night. Where's Janka and the team?"

I told him my story and his face grew as soft as a woman's.

"You're a brave fellow," he said "and I haven't treated you squarely. But it ain't too late to make amends. You saved the gold and half of it is yours."

"I won't take it," said I.

"You will," said he, and as his voice had the old stubborn ring I didn't argue the matter.

The Vaal being rapid and swollen, we knew it was no use to look for the team nor did we doubt that Janka's drowned body was tangled in the wagon. We bought a cart and bullocks from a Dutch farmer and made our way down to Port Natal. The bag of gold didn't hold exactly a fortune, but it gave each of us a tidy sum. Garwood went home to England with his. I bought this place here, stocked it with cattle and sheep and put up the buildings. That's how I got my first start, and I've prospered ever since.

Do I think that Janka intended robbery and murder from the first? That's a hard question to answer, sir, and I think you could probably answer it as well as I.—N.Y. Herald.

Mansfield's Philosophy.

Here's a thoroughly Mansfield-y one. The eminent speechmaker met a friend the other day, and conversation drifted in the direction of—well, of Mr. Mansfield.

"Don't you find," asked the friend, "that all these Beau Brummels and Jekyll-and-Hydes that go through the country with garbled versions of your great success hurt your business? I should imagine that it must be very galling to your sense of artistic fitness. Have you never made any attempt to suppress them?"

Mansfield smiled, an indulgent yet a beautiful smile.

"My dear sir," he said, in his courtly, almost English tones, "you must have noticed in London that the monkeys which accompany the organ grinders through the streets there are invariably garbed in red coats. Have you ever heard that this has excited the ire of the British army?"

A Man's Steps in a Year.

A Swiss statistician has taken the trouble to count the number of steps he took in walking during the whole year. The number he finds to have been 9,760,900, or an average of 25,740 steps a day. Going still further into details, he declares that over 600,000 of these steps were taken in going up and downstairs.—Current Literature.

"We Must Use the Bayonet."

April 6 was the first day of battle at Shiloh (1862). The 5th had been fixed upon for the grand assault of Grant's unformed lines, but a drenching storm delayed the Confederate march. A council of war decided that the delay would be fatal. Albert Sidney Johnston, the Confederate leader, had other views of the situation. He was a soldier of the noble Roman type, a warrior, not a mere fighter, neither courting nor shirking danger. "I would fight them now if they were a million," said he, and gave orders for attack at daylight on the 6th. While the lines were forming the generals again urged a retreat. Before the chief could reply a few shots were heard at the extreme front. "The battle has opened, gentlemen," said he grimly, and spurred his horse to the scene. From that time until a bullet cut short his life he was where the fight was hottest. Grant's front lines were hurled back upon the reserves, with awful carnage. The last stand was at the famous "Hornets' Nest" in the Union center. Four times the Confederates recoiled from the stinging bullets that poured from the thicket. Riding up to a brigade of Tennesseeans, Johnston waved his hand along the line of glistening steel points. "Men, they (the enemy) are stubborn," said he, "and we must use the bayonets. I will lead you." With a wild shout the troops dashed on at a call so modest, yet so thrilling. There was a roar of cannon and musketry, a hurricane of lead and iron, a withering Confederate line and a field strewn with their dead, but without a pause the brigade went up the steep to the crest. Johnston was struck four times. One ball severed an artery and he bled to death before a tourniquet could be applied to the wound. Surgical skill might have saved the hero's life, but he had sent his personal surgeon to minister to Grant's wounded, passed on the field. When remonstrated with for this forgetfulness of self, he answered: "These men were our enemies a moment ago. They are prisoners now. Take care of them."

GENERAL JOHNSTON.

GEORGE L. KILMER.

The Night Assault at Badajoz.

April 6, 1812, was the date of the storming of Badajoz, Spain, under Wellington. Within a space of 100 square yards 700 British were killed and 3,000 wounded. The attack was delayed beyond the appointed hour, owing to the tardiness of one division, and, a lighted carcass having been thrown from the walls of Castle San Roque by the French garrison, the English saw that their lines would be discovered. Instantly Wellington's third division crossed the Gaudiana over a narrow bridge, deployed and ran up the hill to the castle. Their leader, General Kempt, was killed, but the men reared heavy ladders against the walls and mounted in the face of showers of stones, logs and lighted shells rolled down from the parapet. At the top the French stabbed the assailants with pikes and bayonets and pushed their ladders over. Baffled, yet unsubdued, the British retired and reformed ranks, galled by the wild shouts of victory from the French. The heroic Colonel Ridge called for a ladder and placed it against the wall as a sign that the end was not yet. Another and another was reared alongside by gallant emulators. Ridge mounted first and stood alone on the rampart. The soldiers followed with wild shouts, though the French cut down the first comers to a man. Victory crowned this effort, but every general in the army fell. Ridge was killed instantly on the rampart. "And no man fell that night with more glory than he, yet many fell, and there was much glory."

GEORGE L. KILMER.

Where Iron Fell Like Rain.

April 7, 1863, was the date of Dupont's naval attack on Fort Sumter. The country demanded that Charleston be taken, and this could only be done by reducing Sumter, Moultrie and the Sullivan and Morris Island batteries. Nine ironclads composed the line, with orders to steam up within 600 or 800 yards of Sumter, aim low and rapidly, and level it to the ground before turning upon the other forts. The first shot of the action came from Moultrie. It was fired at 3 p. m. and answered by the Weehawken, when all the guns of ships and forts began exchanging shots. The flagship Ironsides and four of her consorts of the first division were disabled or driven from their course in less than an hour and before they got within half the distance required by the orders. The Ironsides at one time rested directly over a 2,000 pound torpedo, connected by electric wires with the shore, but when the electrician attempted to blow her out of water the wires refused to work. The Keokuk, with Commander Rhind on deck, steamed on, leaving the disabled monitors in the lurch. She got within 900 yards, and before she had fired half a dozen shots was riddled like a colander. Rhind was hit, but continued limping about on deck, giving orders to his men. He held the vessel under Sumter's walls until she had been struck by 90 charges, some of which exploded and rained iron upon her decks and turrets. Nineteen missiles pierced her armor below water line. Although his ship was a sinking wreck, the gallant Rhind waited for the admiral's signal to leave off action before he would turn his back to the enemy. The Keokuk labored down the channel and went to the bottom off Morris island, the worst mauled ship that ever came out of a battle by her own unaided power.

THE CHRONICLES OF MARTIN HEWITT

By ARTHUR MORRISON

THE CASE OF THE MISSING HAND

[Copyright, 1895, by Bacheller, Johnson and Bacheller.]

CHAPTER III.

"Not seen him? Why my dear sir, there's no question of it. It's certain absolutely. The evidence is positive. The fact of the threats and of the body being found treated so is pretty well enough, I should think. But that's nothing — look at those footmarks. They've walked along with him, one each side, without a possible doubt; plainly they were the last people with him in any case. And you don't mean to ask anybody to believe that the dead man, even if he hanged himself, cut off his own hand first. Even if you do, where's the hand? And even putting aside all these considerations, such a complete case in itself, the Fosters must at least have seen the body as they came past, and yet nothing has been heard of them yet. Why didn't they spread the alarm? They went straight away in the opposite direction from home—there are their footmarks, which you've not seen yet, beyond the gravel."

Hewitt stepped over to where the patch of clean gravel ceased, at the opposite side to that from which we had approached the brook, and there, sure enough, were the now familiar footmarks of the brothers leading away from the scene of Sneathy's end.

"Yes," Hewitt said; "I see them. Of course, Mr. Hardwick, you'll do what seems right in your own eyes, and in any case not much harm will be done by the arrest beyond a terrible fright for that unfortunate family. Nevertheless, if you care for my impression it is, as I have said, that the Fosters have not seen Sneathy to-day."

"But what about the hand?"

"As to that I have a conjecture, but as yet it is only a conjecture, and if I told it you would probably call it absurd—certainly you'd disregard it, and perhaps quite excusably. The case is a complicated one, and if there is anything at all in my conjecture, one of the most remarkable I have ever had to do with. It interests me intensely, and I shall devote a little time to following up the theory I have formed. You have, I suppose, already communicated with the police?"

"I wired to Shopperton at once as soon as I heard of the matter. It's a twelve-mile drive, but I wonder the police have not arrived yet. They can't be long; I don't know where the village constable has got to, but in any case he wouldn't be much good. But as to your idea that the Fosters can't be suspected—well, nobody could respect your opinion, Mr. Hewitt, more than myself, but, really—just think. The notion's impossible—fifty-fold impossible. As soon as the police arrive I shall have that trail followed and the Fosters apprehended. I should be a fool if I didn't."

"Very well, Mr. Hardwick," Hewitt replied, "you'll do what you consider your duty of course, and quite properly. Though I would recommend you to take another look at those three trails in the path. I shall take a look in this direction." And he turned up by the side of the streamlet, keeping on the gravel at its side.

I followed. We climbed the rising ground and presently among the trees came to the place where the little rill emerged from the broken ground in the highest part of the wood. Here the clean gravel ceased and there was a large patch of wet clayey ground. Several marks left by the feet of cattle were there, and one or two human footmarks. Two of these (a pair), the newest and the most distinct, Hewitt studied carefully, and measured in each direction.

"Notice these marks," he said. "They may be of importance or they may not—that we shall see. Fortunately they are very distinctive—the right foot is a badly worn one, and a small tag of leather, where the sole is damaged, is doubled over and trodden into the soft earth. Nothing could be luckier. Clearly they are the most recent footsteps in this direction—from the main road, which lies right ahead, through the rest of the wood."

"Then you think somebody else has been on the scene of the tragedy, beside the victim and the brothers?" I said.

"Yes, I do. But hark; there is a vehicle in the road. Can you see between the trees? Yes, it is the police cart. We shall be able to report its arrival to Mr. Hardwick as we go down."

We turned and walked rapidly down the incline to where we came from. Mr. Hardwick and his man were still there, and another rustic had arrived to gape. We told Mr. Hardwick that he might expect the police presently, and proceeded along the gravel skirting the stream, toward the lower part of the wood.

Here Hewitt proceeded very cautiously, keeping a sharp lookout on either side for footprints on the neighboring soft ground. There were none, however, for the gravel margin of the stream made a sort of footpath of itself, and the trees and undergrowth were close and thick on each side. At the bottom we emerged from the wood on a small piece of open ground skirting a lane, and here, just by the side of the lane where the stream fell into a trench, Hewitt suddenly pounced on another footmark. He was unusually excited.

"See," he said, "here it is—the right foot with its broken leather, and the corresponding left foot on the damp edge of the lane itself. He—the man with the broken shoe—has walked on the hard gravel all the way down from the source of the stream, and his is the only trail unaccounted for near the body. Come, Brett, we've an adventure on foot. Do you care to let your uncle's dinner go by the board, and follow?"

"Can't we go back and tell him?"

"No—there's no time to lose, we must follow up this man—or at least I must. You go or stay, of course, as you think best."

I hesitated a moment, picturing to myself the excellent colonel as he would appear after waiting dinner an hour or two for us, and decided to go. "At any rate," I said, "if the way lies along the roads we shall probably meet somebody going in the direction of Ratherby. But what is your theory? I don't understand at all. I must say everything Hardwick said seemed to me to be beyond question. There were the tracks to prove that the three had walked together to the spot and that the brothers had gone on alone, and every other circumstance pointed the same way. Then, what possible motive could anybody else about here have for such a crime, unless, indeed, it were one of the people defrauded by Sneathy's late companies."

"The motive," said Hewitt, "is, I fancy, almost extraordinary—indeed a weird one; a thing as of centuries ago. Ask me no questions; I think you will be a little surprised before very long. But come, we must move." And we wended our pace along the lane.

The lane, by the bye, was hard and firm, with scarcely a spot where a track might be left except in places at the sides, and at these places Hewitt never gave a glance. At the end the lane turned into a by-road, and at the turning Hewitt stopped and scrutinized the ground closely. There was nothing like a recognizable footmark to be seen, but almost immediately Hewitt turned off to the right, and we continued our brisk march without a glance at the road.

"How did you judge which way to turn then?" I asked.

"Didn't you see?" replied Hewitt. "I'll show you at the next turning."

Half a mile further on the road forked, and here Hewitt stopped and pointed silently to a couple of small twigs, placed crosswise, with the longer twig of the two pointing down the branch of the road to the left. We took the branch to the left and went on.

"Our man's making a mistake," Hewitt observed. "He leaves his friends' messages lying about for his enemies to read."

We hurried forward with scarcely a word. I was almost too bewildered by what Hewitt had said and done to formulate anything like a reasonable guess as to what our expedition tended, or even to make an effective inquiry—though after what Hewitt had said I knew that would be useless. Who was this mysterious man with the broken shoe, what had he to do with the murder of Sneathy, what did the mutilation mean, and who were his friends who left him signs and messages by means of crossed twigs?

We met a man, by whom I sent a short note to my uncle, and soon after we turned into a main road. Here, again, at the corner, was the curious message of twigs. A cart wheel had passed over and crushed them, but it had not so far displaced them as to cause any doubt that the direction to take was to the right. At an inn a little further along we entered and Hewitt bought a pint of Irish whisky and a flat bottle to hold it in, as well as a loaf of bread and some cheese, which we carried away wrapped in paper.

"This will have to do for our dinner," Hewitt said, as we emerged.

"But we're not going to drink a pint of common whisky between us?" I asked, in some astonishment.

"Never mind," Hewitt answered, with a smile. "Perhaps we'll find somebody to help us—somebody not so fastidious as yourself as to quality."

Now we hurried—hurried more than ever, for it was beginning to get dusk and Hewitt feared a difficulty in finding and reading the twig signs in the dusk. Two more turnings we made each with its silent direction — the crossed twigs. To me there was something almost weird and creepy in this curious hunt for the invisible and incomprehensible, guided faithfully and persistently at every turn by this now unmistakable signal. After the second turning we broke into a trot along a long, winding lane, but presently Hewitt's hand fell on my shoulder and we stopped. He pointed ahead, where some large object, round a bend of the hedge, was illuminated as though by a light from below.

"We will walk now," Hewitt said. "Remember that we are on a walking tour, and have come along here entirely by accident."

We proceeded at a swinging walk, Hewitt whistling gayly. Soon we turned the bend and I saw that the large object was a traveling van, drawn up with two others on a space of grass by the side of the lane. It was a gypsy encampment, the caravan having apparently only lately stopped, for a man was still engaged in tugging at the rope of a tent that stood near the vans. Two or three sullen-looking ruffians lay about a fire which burned in the space left in the middle of the encampment. A woman stood at the door of one van with a large kettle in her hand, and at the foot of the steps below her a more pleasant-looking old man sat on an inverted pail. Hewitt swung toward the fire from the road, and with an indescribable mixture of slouch, bow and smile addressed the company generally with "Kosshto mush, indel."

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Those who never read the advertisements in their newspapers miss more than they presume. Jonathan Kenison, of Bolan, Worth Co., who had been troubled with rheumatism in his back, arms and shoulders, read an item in his paper about how a prominent German citizen of Fort Madison had been cured. He procured the same medicine, and to use his own words: "It cured me right up." He also says: A neighbor and his wife were both sick in bed with rheumatism. Their boy was over to my house and said they were so bad that he had to do the cooking. I told him of Chamberlain's Pain Balm and how it had cured me, he procured a bottle of it and it cured them up in a week. 50 cent bottles for sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy, Park and North aves. T. S. Since the introduction of Cod-liver Oil into the treatment of consumption, the average life of patients has increased from two to eight years. The number of cases cured in the early stages of the disease has multiplied, and physicians now assert that consumption can almost always be averted if good care and treatment are begun in time.

Cod-liver Oil ought always to be a part of the treatment, and it should be taken in the form of Scott's Emulsion, which is palatable and does not derange digestion. Scott's Emulsion is in every way superior to plain oil. Don't accept a substitute!

An Atomizer that Economizes.

A wonderful little piece of machinery is being exhibited in the rooms formerly occupied by Judge Coddington. It is the Automatic Gas Atomizer, and by its use gas consumers can practice great economy as well as secure a more brilliant light from the gas burned. With the atomizer is an improved meter, which accurately registers the amount of gas burned from minute to minute. The meter has nothing to do with the atomizer, and is only used to demonstrate to the spectator the advantage to be derived from permitting gas to pass through the cylinder before entering the jet. A Daily Press reporter yesterday afternoon witnessed a practical test of its efficiency in saving the amount of gas burned, when in one minute, without the atomizer, 6 4-10 feet were burned, and in another minute, with the gas flowing through the atomizer, only 1 7-10 feet were consumed—the latter generating a far better light. By this method the gas is reduced to the smallest atoms, thus destroying the unhealthy portions escaping from other burners. A representative of the Automatic Gas Atomizer Company of New York has charge of the exhibition, and is ready to dispose of the right to sell in any section in New Jersey.

A Small Fire Arouses the Borough.

The residence of D. C. Allen, 29 Harrison street, North Plainfield, was discovered to be on fire this morning at 1, and an alarm was sent in from box 156, corner of Harrison and Cedar streets. The firemen were delayed in responding to the call, but the flames were soon extinguished. The irregular blowing of the fire-gong bewildered most people as to the location of the fire, and many thought that the alarm was sounded by the disarrangement of the clock mechanism or some other cause, and therefore paid no attention to it. Chief Doane of the city fire department went to the scene of the fire.

Marvelous Results.

From a letter written by Rev. J. Gunderman, of Diamondale, Mich., we are permitted to make this extract: 'I have no hesitation in recommending Dr. King's New Discovery, as the results were almost marvelous in the case of my wife. While I was pastor of the Baptist Church at Rives Junction she was brought down by pneumonia succeeding la grippe. Terrible paroxysms of coughing would last hours with little interruption and it seemed as if she could not survive them. A friend recommended Dr. King's New Discovery it was quick in its work and highly satisfactory in results. Sold by L. W. Randolph druggist. Regular [size] 50c and $1; our price 45c and 90c.

ARRESTED FOR BRIBING NEGROES.

A New Brunswick Republican to Be Prosecuted by the Local Goo Goos.

New Brunswick, April 9—Freeholder David McCloskey appeared at Police Headquarters this afternoon with City Treasurer James Neilson to prefer a complaint of bribery at the polls against Henry Banker, a wholesale grocer, whose cousin is running for Alderman in the Second Ward. Messrs. Neilson and McCloskey are Democrats, Mr. Banker is a Republican.

Mr. McCloskey said he was trying to earn the reward of $500 offered by the City Club for evidence that would lead to a conviction for bribery.

He was prepared, he added, to make affidavit that Michael Daly, a grocer, had told him that he saw Henry Banker offer money to several colored men. Daly's grocery is at Remsen avenue and Seaman street. It is alleged that several bribes were given and taken in the immediate vicinity of his store.

Recorder Harkins took Mr. McCloskey's complaint, and a warrant for Henry Banker's arrest was placed in the hands of Policeman VanDuersen. Mr. Banker was found in the Second ward and gave bail in $400 before Recorder Harkins. He became his own bondsman. It is said that the City Club will prosecute the case.

Their boy was over to my house and said they were so bad that he had to do the cooking. RECOVERED THE RIG.

But the Man Who Took It Has Not Been Found, Though Wanted for Forgery Besides.

After a long and tedious search, the horse and wagon belonging to Terrill & Cole which was taken away by John Veghte last Friday, has been found.

E. S. Toxell & Son of Madison read a notice in one of the New York papers yesterday morning telling about the loss of the rig, and the description given was exactly that of one which they had at their livery stable in Madison. They at once sent word to Moses Terrill, and he answered immediately, saying that it was in all probability the missing rig.

Mr. Terrill took a horse and wagon from his stable and started for Madison about 12:30 yesterday noon. As soon as he reached his destination and saw the horse and wagon, he recognized them, and after paying for the keeping brought them back home with him.

The missing property had been left at the Madison stable late last Friday afternoon, by Veghte. Nothing more has been heard of him.

The offer of reward for his arrest still stands, as the owners are anxious to punish him.

It was learned that he had succeeded in getting a forged check cashed in Morristown, and that a charge would be pressed against him for that as soon as he was caught.

Terrill & Cole's rig was not injured in the least, and they are very thankful to regain their property.

WATERS ARE RAGING

Spring Freshets Creating Havoc in Many Places.

The Worst Flood Port Jervis Has Experienced in Seventeen Years—Much Stock Drowned and Bridges and Buildings Swept Away in the Neversink Valley.

Port Jervis, N. Y., April 10.—The most disastrous flood that has visited this section for 17 years is now prevailing. The Neversink and Delaware rivers have overflowed their banks and fields for miles along their courses are submerged. Farms along the Neversink valley from this village to Oakland have suffered great damage from destruction of buildings, erosion of soil and otherwise. A large bridge across the Bashes kill at West Brookfield was swept away and many smaller ones in the vicinity of Hugenot and Sparrowbush, including the foot bridge of the Pipe Line company.

From House to House in Boats.

At Tristates, a suburb of Port Jervis, the main street is flooded and the residents go to and from their houses in boats. The streets of that locality have been torn up and rendered impassable for horses by the bursting of sewers causing numerous depressions and pitfalls. A large portion of Laurel Grove cemetery is covered with water and the large receiving vault is flooded. The eastbound tracks of the Erie are covered with water at Bouchie and Long Eddy, and all trains pass around on the westbound track.

Refuge on the Hills.

At Cochecton flats and Barryville the rise of the Delaware river has submerged many of the low-lying houses and their occupants have been compelled to take refuge on the hills. The water in both Delaware and Neversink rivers was higher last night than at any time in seventeen years. Reports from up the Delaware river indicate that the flood reached its height at about 3 p. m. and is falling rapidly.

Much Stock Drowned.

Monticello, N. Y., April 10.—The storm of Monday and Monday night was more severe and did more damage to property in Sullivan county than any storm within the remembrance of the oldest settlers. Much stock has been drowned in the Neversink valley, and bridges and buildings have been swept away. The New York, Ontario & Western Railroad company were unable to run trains by Livingston Manor Monday night owing to damage to bridges along the Willowemoc river. It is impossible to-day to estimate the loss of property.

Rivers Over Their Banks at Easton.

Easton, Pa., April 10.—The rains of the past forty-eight hours have caused the Delaware, Lehigh and Bushkill rivers at Easton to rise rapidly and overflow their banks. The water in the Delaware here showed twenty-six feet above low water mark this morning and it is still rising. The dwellings and mills on the Bushkill creek are inundated on the lower floors and much damage has resulted.

It Was a Grand Sight.

Littleton, N. H., April 10.—The heavy rain of the past two days has raised the Ammonoosuc river above here, breaking the ice and causing a freshet. A large amount of timber of the Waunbeck Lumber company broke loose, tearing out the dam at Alderbrook, Bethlehem, and seriously endangering property here. It was a magnificent sight here, as the ice and timber went through.

Drowned in a Freshet.

Greenfield, Mass., April 10.—The body of Linus Burt, drowned yesterday in the freshet, has been recovered and will be sent to his daughter in North Windham, Vt., for burial. Reports from the surrounding country show much damage from the storm and washouts. Numerous small bridges and culverts were washed away and hill roads badly gullied.

Floods Stop Factories at Ballston.

Ballston, N. Y., April 10.—All six of the Hon. George West's pulp and paper mills here and in this vicinity and the mills of the National Folding Box company and the axe and scythe factories of the American Axe & Tool company have been compelled to shut down on account of the high water in the Kayaderosseras river that furnishes their power.

Reservoir Dam Bursts.

Keene, N. H., April 10.—The dam at Fairfield's reservoir, on Beech Hill, gave way yesterday, leaving a gap about thirty feet wide in the centre. Many streets were washed out three or four feet below their surface.

Floods at Winsted, Conn.

Winsted, Conn., April 10.—The rain storm of Monday night raised the water in Mad river so that the Strong Manufacturing company were compelled to shut down yesterday. Stage men report the highways badly washed.

High Water at Lambertville.

Lambertville, N. J., April 10.—The Delaware river has risen fourteen feet during the past twelve hours and the water is still rising. Many families are moving their goods to higher ground.

Freshet in the Upper Hudson.

Hudson, N. Y., April 10.—The freshet in the upper Hudson river is not creating any trouble yet; at most points the wharves are submerged. It is due to the south winds and April rains.

Water Rising at Owego.

Binghamton, N. Y., April 10.—The water in the Canawanna creek at Owego is about 13½ feet above low water mark and is rising rapidly. Many families have moved from the lowlands.

Village Election at Saratoga.

Saratoga, N. Y., April 10.—In the village election which was held here yesterday under the McNaughton amended charter bill, eleven republicans and two democrats were elected trustees.

Judge Martine's Successor.

Albany, April 10.—Gov. Morton has appointed Thomas Allison of the Twenty-seventh assembly district of New York to be the successor of the late Judge Martine.

Zimmerman To Wed.

Troy, N. Y., April 10.—It is announced authoritatively that Arthur A. Zimmerman, the champion bicyclist will wed in June next Miss Grace Riley, of this city.

FIRING UPON THE ETHELRED.

Story of the Incident Told by Capt. Hopkins.

Boston, April 10.—The steamship Ethelred, which was fired upon by a Spanish gunboat on her outward voyage to Jamaica, has arrived at her dock here. Capt. Hopkins, her commander, said, concerning the firing: "On April 1 we were proceeding on our course when about 11 o'clock in the forenoon, off Cape Maysi, we sighted a vessel which we could not at first make out. We were about a mile from the shore. Suddenly the stranger fired a blank shot across our bows. This caused great excitement on board my boat, the passengers being considerably alarmed. When the shot was fired, I stopped and allowed the vessel to come within hailing distance of us. I found it was a gunboat, but I could not clearly distinguish the name. When she saw the British flag floating over my vessel she quietly steamed past us. We then proceeded to Jamaica, where I laid the matter before the proper authorities."

TO TEST THE TAX.

Washington Lawyers Preparing To Fight Various Parts of the Law.

Washington, April 10.—Since the delivery of the income tax decision attorneys and others interested in overthrowing the tax have been taking steps to test various parts of the law in further proceedings. Attacks will be made both on those portions that were sustained by a tie vote and on some fresh points not passed upon in the particular cases just decided. Attorney J. M. Wilson of Shellabarger & Wilson, who represented John G. Moore in the court of appeals in the recent cases, said that further proceedings would be taken immediately. "Several parts of the law will be attacked," said he, "the principal one being the exemption from taxation of incomes under $4,000 annually. This will be attacked as an unjust discrimination. I cannot say just yet who the complainants or what the titles of the suits will be, but they will be instituted very soon."

W. J. DEMOREST DEAD.

The Well Known Publisher and Prohibition Leader Passes Away.

New York, April 10.—W. Jennings Demorest died yesterday at his home in this city of pneumonia. He became ill a week ago while attending the prohibition conference in Newburg. He was a prohibition leader who was well known throughout this country and Europe, and was the founder and publisher of Demorest's Family Magazine. He was born in this city June 10, 1822. In 1885 he organized the National Prohibition bureau, and later the Constitutional league, through which he intended to present to the United States supreme court a case attacking the constitutionality of liquor license and tax laws. Mr. Demorest was a candidate for mayor of New York on the prohibition ticket in 1890 and once was a candidate for lieutenant-governor.

MILLIONS ARE MISSING

Another Whiskey Trust Disclosure.

Experts Claim To Have Found That $3,000,000 Cannot Be Accounted for on Records of the Trust—Greenhut, Woolner and Others Are Accused.

Chicago, April 10.—Another chapter of whiskey trust sensation has been made public by the filing of a bill of complaint in the United States district court by Receiver McNulta and the reorganized committee. The general allegation is made that up to April, 1893, the three experts who have been at work on the books of the Cattle Feeding & Distilling company have found that $3,000,000 cannot be accounted for on the records of the trust.

Charged with Misappropriation.

The bill charges Joseph B. Greenhut and Samuel Woolner, of Peoria, with the misappropriation of $290,000. The other defendants named in the bill are Peter J. Hennessy, Nelson Morris and the Distilling & Cattle Feeding company. This is the first time the receiver and the New York reorganization committee have joined hands in the legal proceedings. It is only one of a series of bills which will be filed against the trust directors resident in Illinois.

Big Sums Not Accounted for.

It is charged that at the director's meeting held November 4, 1892, it was agreed to buy the Nebraska distillery at Nebraska city, the Central distillery at St. Louis and the Star and Crescent distillery at Pekin, Ill. Samuel Woolner acted as agent for the trust, receiving $25,000 for his services. The price contracted for was $1,685,000, but the amount that appears on the books is $1,954,440. Of the latter amount the bill alleges Greenhut received $225,000 and Woolner $65,000, besides his fee as agent, and that these amounts have not been accounted for in any manner.

Astounded at the Exposures.

The first news of the foregoing condition of affairs was received by Gen. McNulta Monday and he immediately telegraphed the three experts at Peoria to return to Chicago at once and bring documents and books in support of the charges. The experts and receiver worked until late last night. All were astounded at the exposures of the gigantic frauds made by the experts, who presented a rough report of their examination made up to April, 1893.

Even Forgery Hinted at.

Expert O'Brien said he had not in his fifty year's experience seen anything like such a condition of accounts and he had handled the Erie and Lackawanna books. The disclosures were so startling that Mr. Bijur left for New York at once and Mr. Hutton returned to Cincinnati. The experts allege that all sorts of transactions were covered by fraudulent entries and a lawyer in the case even went so far as to charge forgery.

THEY MUST GO BACK.

IS IT THE END?

A Time of Great Mortality.

Especially Noticeable in Children.—Will Man Cease to Exist?—Can the "Omega" be Averted?

Why is it, with our improved sanitary appliances, our care to obtain fresh air, pure food, and plenty of exercise, the observance, in fact, of every hygienic law, that in spite of every care each succeeding generation seems to become weaker and shorter lived? Is it that we are now suffering for indiscretions of our ancestors, or is that terrible, unknown end of man at hand?

Whatever the cause, the existing condition of things is too apparent. Especially is this noticeable with he babies. Instead of the mother's life-giving milk, they are compelled to begin a struggle for existence with the bottle. The result in many cases is disastrous. The little one, failing to obtain necessary nourishment, grows weaker daily, until death ends the struggle. The end in these cases is Simply Starvation.

With this termination so often the case, the best physicians of the day have resorted to the use of Bovinine, that great and original raw food product, as a means to save the babies.

In this connection Dr. A. B. Robinson, 61 Dudley St., Boston, after commending Bovinine most highly for various complications where the waste of disease must be checked, and new blood, flesh, and strength created to effect a cure, says ncerning this life-creating preparation. With feeble, bottle-fed babies, a small mount added to the milk has in my ractice saved many children."

Bovinine is not a medicine, but a life-maintaining, flesh, bone, and blood-making preparation that contains the greatest amount of nourishment in the least possible bulk.

Give it to the little ones while there is still hope. Your physician, if you ask him, will recommend it, and you will bless the results obtained forever.

INCOME TAX LOSSES

Three-fifths May Have Been Cut Off.

No Levy on Royalties from Mines or Oil Wells—Rentals Paid for Leased Railroads Will Probably Escape—Treasury Officials Greatly Troubled Over the Outlook.

Washington, April 10.—The instructions of the commissioner of internal revenue, defining exceptions under the supreme court decision on the income tax, will include not only rents from real estate and municipal bonds, but all royalties from coal, iron and silver mines, oil wells and even rent paid in crops.

May Lose $20,000,000.

Commissioner Miller says that it is almost impossible to anticipate just how much revenue the government will be deprived of in consequence of the exemption of rents and municipal and state bonds by the decree of the supreme court. It had been estimated, before the decision, that the returns from the income tax in accordance with the law would aggregate something like $80,000,000. It had been asserted also since the law was passed that that estimate was too low and that the returns would probably reach as high as $60,000,000 or $70,000,000. If the original estimate is approximately correct, the government may lose $15,000,000 or $20,000,000 of expected revenue. Some even estimate that the loss will amount to fully three-fifths of the expected receipts.

Regrets the Complication.

As to the exemption of state and municipal bonds, Commissioner Miller is not prepared to state how much the government will lose from that source. He is not discouraged, but insists that the provisions of the law will be enforced just as though there had been no modification of the details of the act. Persons may protest, and they may appeal to the courts, but so long as the law is operative it will be enforced to the letter. Commissioner Miller regrets that complications have arisen in connection with the income tax, for the difficulties surrounding its collection are numerous enough without legal obstacles.

Troubled at the Outlook.

Other treasury officers do not take so rosy a view of the situation as does the commissioner of internal revenue. In the absence of any official data on the subjects involved in the exemptions made by the supreme court, all estimates of the amount denied the government are purely guess work. The accounting officers of the department are more troubled by the outlook at present than they were when they were counting upon $30,000,000 or more from the income tax to help out the expenses of the government.

Treasury In Bad Shape.

In spite of the highly colored statements of the financial condition of the treasury the expenditures are running steadily ahead of the receipts. All along the line the expenditures are pared down to the lowest point. In no case is public work pressed where it can safely be held back. A prominent treasury officer who believes that the income tax law has received a vital blow by the decision of the supreme court, predicts that the government will eventually expend almost as much money in collecting the income tax as will be derived from it.

Instructions to Collectors.

Washington, April, 10.—The following telegraphic instruction has just been sent by Commissioner Miller to each of the sixty-three collectors of internal revenue: "Hold income tax list due April 10 until further orders. Retain possession of all returns received."

EFFECT ON RAILROADS.

Great Systems Made Up of Leased Lines Will Escape the Tax.

New York, April 10.—Lawyer Francis Lynde Stetson, formerly President Cleveland's partner in the law business, said to-day that under the decision of the supreme court the great bulk of the railroad property in the United States will be exempt from the income tax. "All of the great railway systems are made up for the most part of leased lines," he said. "These lease-holds are real estate. Their rentals are usually paid in the form of dividends to the stockholders of the leased lines. Since it is clear that these dividends come under the provision of real estate rentals they cannot be assessed for income tax. It would be impracticable, however, for all of the railway lines to be leased, thereby permitting shareholders to avoid the income tax entirely, because, in most of the states, there is a law prohibiting the leasing of any more lines of railway without permission of the state legislatures. Thus the decision of the supreme court, in declaring part of the income tax law void, has resulted in freeing to a great extent the class which it was the greatest desire of the framers and supporters of the act to reach from its effects.

Postoffice Clerk Wounded.

Ballston, N. Y., April 10.—While Warren McCreedy and James Brogan, clerks in the postoffice, were handling a revolver behind the boxes last night the weapon was discharged. The bullet lodged in McCreedy's left cheek below the eye, inflicting a severe, but not fatal, wound.

MISS DICKINSON'S SUIT.

Judge Acheson's Charge Strongly Favored the Defendants.

Scranton, Pa., April 10.—Judge Acheson in the United States circuit court in summoning up the case of Anna Dickinson, charged strongly in favor of the defendants, scarcely leaving counsel for Miss Dickinson a leg to stand upon. The court could not see from the evidence how Dr. Underwood was reponsible to the law in this case, unless it was for negligence in making out the certificate. Mr. Courtright, another defendant who helped to remove Anna to the insane asylum, simply acted in his official capacity as a poor director. Dr. Hileman was her attending physician.

Anna Stood Alone.

The court pointed out that Anna almost stood alone and on every important point was contradicted by a number of witnesses. He particularly warned the jury to consider very carefully the testimony which indicated that Anna once took Susan by the throat and said: "Take away my sister Susan, if she is my sister, and not a devil." The philosophical way to consider the evidence, the court said, was to consider it as a whole and not part by part. The jury retired at 3:10 p. m., and contrary to expectation had not agreed when court adjourned.

THE NICARAGUA CANAL.

Proposed Steps of the British Government to Safeguard Its Interests.

London, April 10.—Replying to a question in the house of commons the parliamentary secretary to the foreign office, Sir Edward Grey, said that the government was aware that the United States had appointed a commission to inquire into the feasibility of plans for building a canal across Nicaragua to connect the Atlantic and Pacific; but Great Britain could not appoint a commission to cooperate with the United States commission unless the government of the United States desired Great Britain to do so. In answer to a question as to whether the government would take all the steps in its power to safeguard the interests of Great Britian in connection with the proposed canal, Sir Edward Grey said that in case the construction of the canal was proceeded with, the government would take steps to insure that British trade was placed on the same footing as that of other nations.

REBEL LEADER KILLED.

Others Wounded in a Fight with Cuban Government Troops.

Havana, April 10.—The governor of Puerto Principe reports that a band of insurgents numbering forty-eight men, moving westward, have been attacked by the government troops in the vicinity of San Miguel and Baga, the leader of the band was killed and a number of his followers were wounded. One of the band was taken prisoner and the remainder fled toward the river Cauto. General La Chambre reports that a government reconnoitering party yesterday met a band of insurgents who landed at Duaba. The troops attacked the insurgents taking three prisoners. The rest of the band fled and are being closely pursued.

Coudrey Awarded $50,000.

NEW JERSEY ELECTIONS

Returns Indicate Republican Gains Generally.

Camden, Newark, Elizabeth, Jersey City and Trenton Carried by the Republicans — Democrats Sweep Hoboken and Make Gains in Montclair—Paterson Democratic.

Trenton, N. J., April 10.—Returns from the elections throughout the state indicate republican gains in nearly every quarter. In this city the republican candidate for mayor received a majority of 2,800. The democratic minorities in the board of freeholders and board of aldermen were cut down and the republicans are intrenched in power for two years.

Light Vote at Newark.

Newark, April 10.—Scarcely two-thirds of the usual vote was polled at the election here. The republicans elected every one of their five candidates for members of the board of works by an average majority of 4,000. Twelve aldermen out of fifteen were also elected by the republicans, giving them a majority in the next council. The democrats elected two out of fifteen school commissioners. Nearly all of the republican candidates for justice of the peace were elected.

Democrats Sweep Hoboken.

Hoboken, April 10.—The democrats scored a clean sweep here. Mayor Lawrence Fagan (dem.) defeated ex-Mayor E. V. S. Besson (rep.) by about 700 majority; water registrar Henry Lohmann, jr., (dem.) defeated Cornelius Kiel, jr., (rep.) by about 500 majority. The democrats elected all their candidates for councilmen.

Republican Gains at Elizabeth.

Elizabeth, April 10.—In the charter election held here the republicans gained two school commissioners. This gives the republicans control of the board. The board of aldermen remains republican by one vote.

Reform Ticket Beaten at Camden.

Camden, April 10.—The municipal election here resulted in the election of the present incumbents of the offices of mayor, recorder, receiver of taxes and city treasurer, the nominees of the regular republican organization. Party lines were almost obliterated, as the republican ticket was opposed by a reform ticket endorsed by the democrats, who put no ticket in the field. Mayor Westcott and the republican ticket were elected by about 900 majority. The regular republican majority is about 2,000.

Democratic Gains at Montclair.

Montclair, April 10.—At the election held here democratic councilmen were elected in the First, Third and Fourth wards. This is a gain of two councilmen. In the board of education democratic gains were made also.

Result at Passaic.

Passaic, April 10.—The republicans here elected Andrew McLean (unopposed) for mayor. The republicans elect the councilmen, school trustees and freeholders in three wards, the democrats carrying the First ward.

Paterson's Mayor Re-elected.

Paterson, April 10.—Mayor Christian Braune (democrat) was re-elected by over 2,000 majority.

Jersey City Republican.

Jersey City, April 10.—The republicans carried the city in the charter election by about 800 majority, electing the entire street and water board.

Gov. McKinley at Hartford.

Hartford, Conn., April 10.—About five hundred people sat down to the banquet of the McKinley club last night at Foot Guard armory. It was an enthusiastic gathering, and Governor McKinley, of Ohio, the guest of honor, made the principal speech, and inspired frequent outbursts of applause.

Peculiar Death of a Teamster.

Trenton, N. J., April 10.—Thomas Loughrey, a teamster, was killed in a peculiar manner yesterday. He was standing on the ground near his horses when they suddenly turned and the wagon tongue struck him over the heart. His death occurred ten minutes later.

Willed to Capt. Moore.

Havre de Grace, April 10.—By the terms of the will of the late H. C. Polhemus, of Brooklyn, N. Y., the yacht Reckless and her equipment is left to Captain William E. Moore. The yacht was fitted up at a cost approximating $10,000.

Murder at Malden, Mass.

Malden, Mass., April 10.—Dr. William H. Farnsworth, little known of here, was shot and probably fatally wounded last night by Charles Withman. Withman admits the shooting and declares Farnsworth was breaking up his home.

Explosion in a Mine.

Nanticoke, Pa., April 10.—An explosion of black damp occurred in shaft No. 2 of the Susquehanna Coal company shortly before noon. Six Polish miners were seriously burned. The mine is badly damaged.

Strike Against Fines.

Rockville, Conn., April 10.—The weavers, about one hundred in number, employed by the Broad Brook Woolen company, at Broad Brook, are on strike on account of excessive fines imposed for imperfect work.

Insurgent Leader Dead.

Havana, April 10.—General Guillermo Moncada, an insurgent leader, is dead at Mucaral. The band of insurgents that was defeated at Baga has received no reinforcements in the province of Puerto Principe.

WHITE OF PLAINFIELD.

AN EASTER FLOWER.

BY BENJAMIN NORTHRUP.

[Copyright, 1895, by American Press Association.]

Just out of the city there is a long winding road which takes you over the low hills to the sands on the beach.

A brackish stream of tide water crosses the road, which is spanned by a stone bridge. No one now living was born when this bridge was built. It is cracked with age, stained and moss covered, and in the crevices grass, flowers and tiny shrubs grow. On some of the stones a wandering missionary has painted signs praising God and calling upon the wicked to repent before it is too late. Over the widest crevice this is painted:

"Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God."

Under this in a little grotto some blue violets had grown, snugly sheltered from the sun and storm.

It was late in May or early in June when she came over the cracked stone bridge on her way to the beach. She had never been in the country before. She had been in the park once, but that was when she was a very small child, and she had forgotten almost how it looked.

Under the shades of the old bridge the children of the Fresh Air fund stopped for luncheon, and she and the other little girls took off their shoes and stockings and paddled in the creek. After the sandwiches and apples, doughnuts and cakes, she found the violets and dug them out. She had never seen anything so beautiful before. They were prettier than all the Easter flowers in the east side shop windows, and they smelled sweeter. Besides that, she herself had found them, and they were her own.

All afternoon, while the other children played in the sands, she played with her violets, picking the soft black earth from their roots to see how small and pink they were, and opening and closing the half blown buds to see the fresh blue hid under the green shells. If some older girl who knew all about the country and wild flowers, this being her second summer in the Fund, if this experienced girl had not told her that violets cannot stand such prying treatment, they never would have lived to reach the town.

It is not far from down Rye way at the stone bridge to down Battery way at the sea wall. Two hours. That is all if you take a fast train, and violets will live a long time when you bury their roots in moistened earth and let the blossoms alone. Therefore, when she reached her home in Battle Court, the flowers were as almost fresh and sweet as they were in their grotto in the bridge.

A cracked stone pitcher became their new home, and on pleasant days they stood outside on the kitchen window sill and looked down on the stone flagged courtyard. Long before midsummer came they had seen more of life than they and all the other violets along the Rye road could ever have dreamed of, giving violets imaginations equal even to their fragrance.

They saw Blind Flaherty, the beggar man, beat his lame boy over by the sink until the police came in, and after them an ambulance. One awful afternoon they saw the wife of Micky Donovan, the prizefighter, jump from the fifth story window of her room and fall on the pavement in a sprawling heap—white, black and red—and she did not even moan when she was picked up.

They also saw Paddy McKeever, him that drives the baker's cart, meet Sally just outside the gate in the shadow the night before they ran away and were married. They liked this, and they also liked the hand organ man who sometimes played in the street outside the court while the children danced to its strains. These things reminded them of the country road, and they were better for seeing and hearing them. It is a great mistake to think that wild flowers forget their country homes when they are planted in town pots. If you do not believe this, just take your spring flowers back to the brook meadows and see how quickly they will revive at one whiff of the fresh, soft air.

In stormy weather she took them inside the room, and when the weather grew cold they stood on a shelf facing the window beside the stove, where it was always warm.

That is the way the violets lived from early in May or late in June until the winter had gone and Easter had almost come.

* * * * * * *

Up town there is a great church. It is rich and beautiful. The sunlight that streams through the stained windows is purple, blue and golden, and sometimes the figure of a saint wondrously colored is cast across the chancel floor.

The little girl who picked the violets used to go to this great church, and she was welcomed here because it is a great church.

Good Friday, with its seven services, had passed, and the Lenten trappings of gloom were being taken away to make place for the Easter flowers. There were lilies, roses, orchids, violets, palms and flowering shrubs. There were great wreaths of greens hung from the pulpit, and the baptismal fount was all white and pink. Rare and common, hothouse and wild flowers were massed together. They were all love offerings, and this is the reason that a simple bunch of blue wild violets found a place in one corner of the altar almost hidden by a splendid display of roses. Only one person saw them, except the young women of the Altar guild, who, laboring for love, arrange the flowers for Easter and other feast days.

She sat in one of the front pews, and she was dressed in plain black, very plain and common black, such as other washerwomen wear when their children die. She saw the violets, and her one wish was that the little girl who had brought them to town from the old stone bridge and had cared for them all year for this very Easter altar were only alive to see them too.

It was a great congregation befitting a great church and a still greater feast day. From the doors to the chancel rail every pew was filled, and there were chairs in the aisles. These were filled, too, and back of them all men and women stood. The front pews in this church are given up on Easter day to the poor of the parish. The children from the orphanage and the caped and bonneted women from the Aged One's home filled several rows on the right, and on the left were the men and women and children who on ordinary Sundays sit far back under the gallery over the vestibule. They teach that God's Son rose from the dead on Easter day for rich and poor alike in this great church.

The chimes in the belfry had finished their song, the big A bell had given the last of its three taps, and the suborganist in the choirroom had taken his note from it.

"Onward, Christian Soldiers," was the hymn, and the great congregation outside heard it sung behind closed doors. Then came the "Amen," louder than the melody, richer and fuller.

The choirroom doors opened, and the choristers, robed in white and black, marched out. The great organ in the chancel caught up the air and led the singers. First came the trebles, sweet and high. Then the altos, they came next, and made a second in the harmony. After them came the tenors, and last of all the bassos. Then the harmony was complete:

Onward, Christian soldiers, marching as to war,
With the cross of Jesus going on before.

That is the refrain. That is what the whole choir sang as they faced each other from the opposite sides of the chancel, and its mighty strains rang through the church like the strain of a band marching at the head of an army into battle.

After the service came the sermon. The preacher was an old man, with white, silken hair. You have seen a skein of silk on a cold day. The threads stand out, one apart from the other. That is the way his fine white hair stood out from his head. It was like a nimbus frosted. His voice was low and soft and sweet. He had sung as a treble in that choir 50 years before. Then he was a tenor, and now for more than 30 years he had been the rector.

"I am going to say something to you today that I have said to you every Easter day for 30 long years."

That is the way the sermon began.

"Christ, my children, rose from the dead on Easter day, but before he rose he died. Some day we may rise and join him in everlasting glory in paradise, but before we shall rise from the dead we must die. We all must die, but when? Shall we be prepared when our summons comes? Are we prepared to die now? Yes, now. Why not? We know not when our time shall come. Every Easter day for one long generation I have repeated this warning as I do today. And among those who heard me there were many who were not alive to hear me on the following year. Some of you must die before next Easter day. When death comes to you, will you be unprepared? Shall the blood of him who died that we might live always be shed in vain in even one sinlge instance? This—is—for—you—alone—to—say."

Even the choir listened to this. The boys stopped fidgeting, and the men sat very still. The woman in black looked at the bunch of violets on the altar, and tears fell upon her gloves.

That was what he said, although he used more words then I have done and took a longer time to say it, and after he left the pulpit and joined the assistant ministers back of the chancel rail there were more wet eyes than the washerwoman's in that great church, and there were many promises made for the coming year that the makers will not live to keep.

* * * * * * *

Early Easter Monday the ladies of the Altar guild were again at work. The flowers which had been sent for the festival were returned to their owners. The chancel stairs were thronged with serving men and maids waiting to carry them home. The other flowers—the cut stalks from the florist, the bouquets from the hothouses and the little bunch of wild violets—were taken away in a wagon to a hospital. The sick have their Easter on Monday.

It was in a long white floored ward. Near the end of it stood an iron cot by a window. This was Jim's cot. Jim was a newsboy before a street car had cut off one of his legs. Before that he had been in the Fresh Air fund, and he loved the country with a love that the real country boy never dreams of until he has grown to be a city man.

They carried down this long ward these fine flowers from the Easter altar—roses, orchids, lilies and still more roses. Their fragrance made the air heavy, and the lame boy turned his face toward the window.

After all had been distributed a nurse brought to him a spray of wild violets. They were all that was left. He took them in his hands and pressed them to his lips. Then he said something about the country so low that the nurse couldn't catch it and fell asleep.

THE PARK MYSTERY.

It was the evening of the first day of the Dorkshire assizes. The judge, on the application of the prosecution, had fixed the following morning for the trial of Capt. Charles Oliver for the murder of Miss Alice Despard, the governess of Sir Robert Roland's children by his first wife. Tom Britely, the leading counsel for the defense, had just arrived from town, and he, with his junior, Mr. Belloe, and the solicitor, Mr. Hooker (of the firm of Harpy & Hooker), were in conference as to the course to be followed the next morning.

"I haven't had time to look at my brief as yet," said Mr. Britely. "I know nothing of the facts in the case. You conducted it before the magistrates, Belloe, didn't you? Perhaps you wouldn't mind giving me an outline of the facts proved in evidence."

"With pleasure," responded Mr. Belloe. "The victim was a Miss Alice Despard, governess of the children of Sir Robert Roland by his first wife. The prisoner is a Capt. Charles Oliver, a friend of Sir Robert and the present Lady Roland. He appears to have made the acquaintance of the governess during his visits to Roland park, but nobody suspected that there was more than the merest acquaintance between them until the engagement of Capt. Oliver and Miss Waverton was announced."

"Who is Miss Waverton?" asked Mr. Britely.

"The half sister of Lady Roland, I believe," replied Mr. Hooker.

"Oh, I wasn't aware of that," said Mr. Belloe.

"Yes, and they say all their father's property went to her," added the solicitor, "and that there's not any love lost between them."

"Yes," said Mr. Britely, as he made a note in the fold of his brief.

"Well, any way," Mr. Belloe went on, "after the announcement of Capt. Oliver's engagement it was noticed that Miss Despard became very despondent. Oliver's engagement was announced on Tuesday, Sept. 7, and on Saturday, the 11th, Miss Despard retired rather early. It is clear now that, instead of going to bed, she went into the park, and, as far as can be discovered, she never returned again, but her absence wasn't noticed till the morning. Then a search was made for her, but it wasn't till evening her body was found. It was ultimately discovered among some laurel bushes not far from the highway, with a bullet wound right through her head. At first it was thought to be suicide, but as no pistol could be found near the spot, the police eventually suspected murder. They searched the girl's boxes and came across a number of love letters. They were simply signed Charlie, but there seems to be no doubt they were written by Capt. Oliver."

"Does he dispute it?" asked Mr. Britely.

"Not seriously, but he says, queerly enough—" said Mr. Hooker.

"Let us hear the evidence given first," interrupted Mr. Britely.

"Well, this discovery led the police to make inquiries as to Oliver's whereabouts on the night of the murder. He refused to give any information, and he was arrested. After his arrest the groom—Horsley—stated that he had seen him, he believed, on the night of the murder in Roland park not far from the place where the body was found, and that he was then accompanied by a lady. Horsley seemed reluctant to give his evidence, and refused to swear positively that the lady with the prisoner was Miss Despard. Two independent witnesses swore positively to seeing Oliver in or about Braxby the same evening, and a policeman met him after midnight walking toward Rottenborough, where he could catch the morning express to town."

"A pretty conclusive identification," said Mr. Britely, "especially in the absence of evidence to show that he was somewhere else. Now, just answer me one or two questions as to the nature of those love letters. Did they contain any promise of marriage?"

"Oh, yes; over and over again," answered Mr. Belloe. "They are very fervent, and they continually repeat promises to marry as soon as the obstruction is removed."

"Obstruction removed," said Mr. Britely reflectively. "Was there any other woman with claims on Oliver?"

"Not as far as I know. The prosecution said this referred to his pecuniary difficulties."

"He was in pecuniary difficulties?"

"Oh, yes; he admitted that."

"Well, let me see," said Mr. Britely. "Was the revolver traced to him?"

"No, not exactly traced," answered Mr. Belloe; "but the police found in his lodgings several revolvers, and the bullet hole in the girl's skull might have been made by the bullet used for any of them."

"I see," said Mr. Britely, and he reflected in silence for a moment. Then turning to Mr. Hooker, he asked: "What does Oliver say about all this?"

"Well, sir, at first he would say nothing, except that the whole thing was rot and he couldn't be convicted, for he wasn't guilty. He maintained this attitude until after Lady Roland had given her evidence, when he seemed to lose his temper. He then, after a day or two of hesitation, told me a most incredible story. He said that, as a matter of fact, he was at Roland Park on the night of the murder and the witnesses who swore they saw him there were right. He went there, he said, at the request of Lady Roland and he spent the whole evening with her in the park when she was supposed to be in bed. He parted with her at a late hour after a bitter quarrel. He had a love affair with her ladyship and the correspondence was conducted through Miss Despard to prevent discovery. Miss Despard was Lady Roland's confidante. All the letters found in Miss Despard's box were written by him to Lady Roland, he said, and the obstacle referred to in them was old Sir Robert. He further said that the letters were either put into Miss Despard's box by Lady Roland or else they were kept by Lady Roland there for safety. He asserts that the whole thing is a plot of Lady Roland's to get revenge for his throwing her over for her sister."

The solicitor paused to watch Mr. Britely's surprise at these statements. Mr. Britely showed none.

"Very clever," he said, quietly; "very clever, indeed. Does he say why he did not tell you this at first?"

"Yes; he said he didn't want to raise a scandal about Lady Roland—especially since he is engaged to her sister."

"Yes; a sufficient reason," was Mr. Britely's comment. Then, after a pause: "Did he say anything as to how Miss Despard came to her end?"

"Yes, sir; he said he thought she had committed suicide. She was always a fidgety, excitable character, he said; and he hinted that she was put out, too, by his engagement."

"Oh! there was a little affair with her also, was there?" said Mr. Britely. Then, turning to Mr. Belloe, he added: "Nice defense; that will appeal to the higher feelings of the jury, eh?"

"He seems to be a bad lot," answered Mr. Belloe.

"Yes; but if he hasn't murdered the girl he shouldn't be hanged," replied Mr. Britely. "His statement squares remarkably with the proved facts. If it's all a lie, it's a clever one. You know nothing about this when he was before the magistrates?"

"No, nothing."

"So much the better, in a way. The prosecution and the witnesses won't be prepared for it. Now, let me see. Has he any proof that this correspondence was, as he says, with Lady Roland?"

"Nothing but his word," answered Mr. Hooker.

"And that's nothing. Has he no letters from her?"

"No; she always wrote through Miss Despard."

"The story looks a bit thin, doesn't it? It seems incredible that two lovers should carry on all their correspondence through a third person."

"Oh, he says he once received a letter from Lady Roland when Miss Despard was away on a holiday."

"Where is it?"

"He destroyed it at her request."

Mr. Britely reflected.

"How long ago was it?" he asked at last.

"About two months ago."

"Well, then, he must remember pretty accurately its contents. Now, listen, Mr. Hooker. I am rather impressed by the prisoner's statement, and I want you to test it for me. Go to him to-morrow and ask him to give you as nearly as he can remember a copy, word for word, of this letter. You write it out again on paper similiar to that on which he says it was originally written and bring it to me. Before leaving him ask him again in the most solemn way whether or not his story is true. Tell him from me that I will act on his word; that as the case stands now, without his story, there is no chance of his escape, but if I act on his story, and it turns out untrue, he'll be hanged as sure as death. If, however, his story is true and I act on it he'll probably escape."

"What are you going to do?" asked Mr. Belloe.

"You'll see to-morrow. I'm off to bed," was Mr. Britely's only answer.

Next morning, just before the case was called on, Mr. Britely and Mr. Belloe came into court. A minute later Mr. Hooker joined them.

"Capt. Oliver," he whispered to Mr. Britely, "says his statement is literally true, but he leaves it to your discretion whether or not you shall act on it."

"But for that hedging I would believe the fellow," answered Mr. Britely. "Now, I scarcely know whether to believe him or not. Is that the copy of the letter?"

"Yes, sir," answered Mr. Hooker.

"Let me see it."

He looked it over carefully.

"Very well." He then said: "We'll see how things go."

Just then the judge entered. Immediately afterward the jury were sworn in, and soon the counsel for the prosecution was opening the case.

The witnesses who were called to prove the prisoner's presence in Braxby were not cross-examined at all, much to the astonishment of the court. Horsley, the groom, who was called to prove his presence in the park in company with Miss Despard, was cross examined, but again, to the astonishment of the court, not with the object of showing that Oliver was not in the park, but that the lady with him was not Miss Despard.

"You say," Mr. Britely said to him, "that the lady you saw with the prisoner was Miss Despard?"

"So I thought, sir," answered the groom.

"But were you sure?" asked Mr. Britely.

"Yes, I am sure, sir."

"But were you sure at the time you saw them?"

The groom hesitated.

"Come, now, were you sure then, or have you become convinced since?" persisted Mr. Britely.

"Well, perhaps I wasn't quite sure at the time," admitted the groom.

"Just so. Now did she look taller than Miss Despard?"

"Yes, I thought at first she did," acquiesced the groom.

"Did she walk more erect?"

"Perhaps she did—yes, I think she did."

"In fact, did you not at first think it was somebody else?"

"Well, yes; I think I did, sir."

"Whom did you thing it was?"

The groom hesitated.

"Come, now," urged Mr. Britely.

"Well, I thought for the moment it was my lady."

"And you only saw her for moment?"

"Yes, sir; but I'm sure now it was Miss Despard."

"Never mind about that."

Mr. Britely sat down. He turned to Mr. Belloe.

"Oliver's not lying. We've won the case."

Lady Roland was called next. She entered the box very pale, but also very determined. She was a strikingly handsome woman, with black hair and deep set dark eyes, an aquiline nose and thin, firmly compressed lips. She answered the questions put to her shortly and clearly. She had, she said, known or suspected nothing of an intrigue or love affair between the prisoner and her governess. A few days before the girl's death she noticed she was much depressed. She endeavored to discover the cause, but failed.

On the night of Saturday, Sept. 11, the witness retired to rest earlier than usual—she had a headache—about 8:30. The deceased had not come downstairs after seeing the children were properly put to bed; she seldom did come down. It was only in the morning witness first learned that the governess was missing. She then communicated with the police. Meanwhile she searched the girl's room to see if there was anything there to account for her disappearance. She discovered the letters produced, and on learning that the girl had been murdered handed them to the police. She had seen Capt. Oliver write, and had no doubt whatever that they were in his handwriting.

Mr. Britely rose to cross-examine.

"You never saw the letters produced till the Sunday after the girl's death?" he asked.

"Never," answered Lady Roland.

"You yourself have had no correspondence with the prisoner?"

"Oh, yes, I have."

"Of what kind?"

"I have often written asking him to stay with us. I knew him well."

"I understand. But no love letters have passed between him and you?"

"You are insulting me, sir."

"I should be very sorry to do so, Lady Roland, but I must obey my instructions. If what I suggest is untrue, deny it. No love letters ever passed between you and the prisoner?"

"No, none. It is an infamy to suggest it."

"Now, Lady Roland, did you go to bed when you retired to your room Saturday night—the night in question?"

"Yes, I did."

"You swear that?"

"Yes."

"You did not go out to the park?"

"No, I did not."

"You did not meet Capt. Oliver there by appointment?"

"I did not."

"The groom was mistaken in thinking the lady he saw with the prisoner was you?"

"He was."

"You have never made appointments with the prisoner by means of letters written by the deceased girl?"

"Never."

"Now, I put it to you. You did make such appointments. You had a love affair with the prisoner. The deceased girl was merely a go-between, who, to prevent discovery, wrote your letters to the prisoner and received his letters for you. Is there any truth in this?"

"Not an atom."

"You never wrote to him yourself?"

"Never a love letter."

"That's what I mean. Now, you swear to this?"

"I do."

"Now, listen to this," said Mr. Britely, very quietly, taking up the copy of the letter which had been prepared for him. "Now, listen to this, Lady Roland, and then say if you are willing to stand by what you have said:

Roland Park, Aug. 13.

My Darling Charlie—I am breaking my heart to see you again. Miss Despard is away on a holiday, and won't be back for a week. I can't wait all that time to write to you. Why do you come so seldom now? If you play me false I'll have my revenge. Do come, dearest, and tell me what you are doing. I am dying for love of you. Your broken hearted

HELEN.

Don't mind my threats, dearest; I'm half mad through your neglect.

When Mr. Britely came to the end of the note he looked up at Lady Roland. She was ghastly.

"Well?" he said.

"My God, he had swore to me he had burnt it!"

For a moment or two there was a dead silence over the court. Then the Judge spoke.

"Let me see the original, Mr. Britely," he said.

"It's not an original, my lord," replied Mr. Britely quietly, "only a copy from memory. The original, as the witness says the prisoner told her, is destroyed."

The next second Lady Roland sank down fainting in the box.

She was not further examined or cross-examined. Indeed, her condition was so dangerous that such a proceeding was out of the question. The trial proceeded in a lame way; but the heart was taken out of the prosecution by the collapse of their most important witness, and, under the direction of the Judge, the prisoner was acquitted.

Subsequent discoveries left no doubt that the verdict was just, and that the case was one of suicide. What became of the revolver is now the only mystery in the affair.—Exchange.

Lincoln's Simplicity.

An incident that has probably never appeared in print was related by Schuyler Colfax regarding Abraham Lincoln, and is given in Bell's Altoona Gazette. It was during the dark days of 1863, on the evening of a public reception given at the White House.

A young English nobleman was just being presented to the President. Inside the door, overawed by the splendid assembly, was an honest faced old farmer who shrank from the passing crowd until he and the plain faced old lady clinging to his arm were pressed back to the wall. The President, tall, and in a measure stately in his personal appearance, looking over the heads of the assembly, said to the English nobleman: "Excuse me, my lord, there's an old friend of mine."

Passing backward to the door Mr. Lincoln said, as he grasped the old farmer's hand: "Why, John, I'm glad to see you. I haven't seen you since you and I made rails for old Mr. —— in Sangamon county, in 1847. How are you?"

The old man turned to his wife with quivering lip, and without replying to the salutation, said: "Mother, he's just the same old Abe!"

"Mr. Lincoln," he said finally, "you know we had three boys; they all enlisted in the same company; John was killed in the 'seven days' fight;' Sam was taken prisoner and starved to death, and Henry is in the hospital. We had a little money, an' I said: 'Mother, we'll go to Washington an' see him. An' while we are there we'll go up an' see the President.'"

Mr. Lincoln's eyes grew dim and across the rugged, homely, tender face swept the wave of sadness his friends had learned to know, and he said: "John, we all hope this miserable war will soon be over. I must see all these folks here for an hour or so, and I want to talk with you." The old lady and her husband were hustled into a private room in spite of all their protests.

Knew His Business.

"That's the seventh time this morning," said the shoe merchant, as the customer left the store, "that you told me in a tone of voice that couldn't escape being overheard that a woman reminded you of 'Trilby.'"

"Yes," replied the new clerk, "and that's the seventh woman that I've sold a pair of shoes to."—Washington Evening Star.

The Bible declares that people of wealth and culture are not made of any better clay than common folks, but bushels of sermons are written which studiously avoid pressing home this truth.—Ram's Horn.

The preacher's spiritual life is more apt to widen and deepen when he is being persecuted for righteousness' sake, than when his salary has been doubled.—Ram's Horn.

If some pious souls would groan less and give more, they would feel better.—Ram's Horn.

SCIENCE UP TO DATE.

EXTRAORDINARY THINGS THAT ARE NEW TO EVERYONE.

Gas Made Which Costs but 10 Cents a Thousand Cubic Feet and Is Brighter than an Incandescent Electric Light. Voice Photographed While You Wait.

An exhibition was given recently under the direction of the New York Academy of Sciences to show the progress science has made within the past year or so. It was the second show of the sort. The separate booths were presided over by the respective experts in the different branches which they represented.

The exhibits were strikingly arranged. Some of the most interesting exhibits were in the photographic department. Many pictures made by the recently contrived process of color photography decorated the walls. There were prints of Turkish rugs, of book bindings, and of paintings, in which the coloring was exactly reproduced. The negatives are made on specially prepared plates corresponding to the three primal colors, red, yellow and blue. When the red plate is exposed a screen is placed before the camera to shut out the green and yellow constituents, and the same process is observed with the other two. In making the reproduction an imprint is taken mechanically from the red plate with red ink, and the blue print and yellow print are superposed in the same way. The result is a copy of the original in all its colors and shades.

The same principle was used in the construction of an exhibit called a photochromoscope, which is soon to be placed on the market, together with a camera for making the triplicate negatives. The photochromoscope is somewhat like a stereoscope, except that the views appear in their natural colors. A box of mixed candies which was shown last night was startlingly realistic. A still further application was shown in an adjoining room in the shape of colored stereopticon views which were almost perfection. A man wearing a blue shirt and a red mustache and some views of the Palisades and the surrounding woodland in gorgeous autumn hues were especially satisfactory.

Dr. T. M. Chessman's bacteriology booth was brought clear up to date by a specimen of diphtheria anti-toxine and the corresponding toxine. There were also bacteria of every sort in abundance, and with names in inverse proportion to their sizes. One of these, the bacillus prodigiosus, was the true cause, so the scientists say, of the miracle of the bloody host. The bacillus, they assert, grew upon the wafer or altar bread after its exposure in the church during the consecration of the host.

In the electrical department the process of electrolysis, as employed in making disinfectants out of sea water, was shown in operation. The disinfectant, made on the spot, was sprayed upon a glass slide fairly alive with microbes while the observer looked through a microscope and saw them stop short and shrivel up almost as quickly as if they had been suddenly frozen in.

The new illuminating gas which is made from calcium carbide was also made on the spot. The process is a very simple one. The carbide is a by product of certain electrical furnace processes. It is put in a jar, water is poured on it and the gas is evolved. The cost is said to be 10 cents a thousand cubic feet, and a burner consuming a foot an hour and giving a flame of the usual size makes a light three times as bright as an ordinary incandescent electric light.

When the visitor was tired of looking at these things, and the exhibits in the departments devoted to geology, palæontology, mechanics, psychology and astronomy he could go and have his voice photographed in the department of physics. The contrivance for accomplishing this feat was exhibited by Dr. Floyd S. Muckey and Dr. W. Hallock. The victim was instructed to sing into an orifice and attune his cry to a fork which sounded the bass C. Inside the contrivance were resonance tubes set for C and for seven overtones or harmonics. Behind each of these was a drum which vibrated for the tone or a harmonic. These connected by rubber tubes with little jets of gas, so that the latter jumped up and down when the drums vibrated. The lights were photographed by a camera which was swung quickly past them, the resulting records being in the form of wavy lines. Each line represented the tone, or an overtone, and showed their relative presence in the voice tested. The stronger the tone was the wavier the line.

The object of the apparatus is to ascertain what proportion of overtones is desirable in a singing voice. Specialists have never been able to tell a throat belonging to a good singer from any other. Several famous singers have had their voices photographed with the new apparatus and these will be compared with ordinary and unmusical voices.

The difference in voices once determined in this way the different throat structures may be better studied, and we may yet have specialists advertising to furnish ambitious young women with first-class operatic voices by simple alterations in the structure of their throats.

A Difficult Combination.

Mr. Meanitall—I wish I had the key of your heart.

Miss Mercy Naree—It has no key. It works with a combination.

Mr. Meanitall—Is the combination a secret?

Miss Mercy Naree—Oh, no. It is wealth, position and a title.

THE CHRONICLES OF MARTIN HEWITT

By ARTHUR MORRISON

THE CASE OF THE MISSING HAND

[Copyright, 1895, by Bacheller, Johnson and Bacheller.]

CHAPTER IV.

The men on the ground took no notice, but continued to stare doggedly before them. The man working at the tent looked round quickly for a moment, and the old man on the bucket looked up and nodded.

Quick to see the most likely friend, Hewitt at once went up to the old man, extending his hand. "Sarshin daddo," (Good luck, brothers!) he said: "dell mandy tooty's varst." (How do you do, father? Give me your hand.)

The old man smiled and shook hands, though without speaking. Then Hewitt proceeded, producing the flat bottle of whisky: "Tatty for pawny, chals. Dell mandy the pawny and lell posh the tatty." (Spirits for water, lads. Give me the water and take your share of the spirits.)

The whisky did it. We were Romany ryes in twenty minutes or less, and had already been taking tea with the gypsies for half the time. The two or three we had found about the fire were still reserved, but these, I found, were only half gypsies and understood very little Romany. One or two others, however, including the old man, were of purer breed, and talked freely, as did one of the women. They were Lees, they said, and expected to be on Wirksby race course in three days' time. We, too, were pirimengroes or travelers, Hewitt explained, and might look to see them on the course. Then he fell to telling gypsy stories, and they to telling others back, to my intense mystification. Hewitt explained afterwards that they were mostly stories of poaching, with now and again a horse-coping anecdote thrown in. Since then I have learned enough of Romany to take my part in such a conversation, but at the time a word or two here and there was all I could understand. In all this talk the man we had first noticed stretching the tent rope took very little interest, but lay with his head away from the fire, smoking his pipe. He was a much darker man than any other present—had, in fact, the appearance of a man of even a swarthier race than that of the others about us. Presently in the middle of a long and, of course, to me unintelligible story by the old man, I caught Hewitt's eye. He lifted one eyebrow almost imperceptibly, and glanced for a single moment at his walking stick. Then I saw that it was pointed towards the feet of the very dark man who had not yet spoken. One leg was thrown over the other as he lay, with the soles of his shoes presented towardthe fire, and in its glare I saw—that the right sole was worn and broken and that a small triangular tag of leather was doubled over beneath in just the place we knew of from the prints in Ratherby wood.

I could not take my eyes off that man with his broken shoe. There lay the secret. The whole mystery of the fastastic crime in Ratherby wood centered in that shabby ruffian. What was it?

But Hewitt went on, talking and joking furiously. The men who were not speaking mostly smoked gloomily, but whenever one spoke he became animated and lively. I had attempted once or twice, to join in, though my efforts were not particularly successful, except in inducing one man to offer me tobacco from his box—tobacco that almost made me giddy in the smell. He tried some of mine in exchange, and though he praised it with native politeness, and smoked the pipe through, I could see that my Hignett mixture was poor stuff in his estimation, compared with the awful stuff in his own box.

ONE LEG WAS THROWN OVER THE OTHER AS HE LAY.

Presently the man with the broken shoe got up, slouched over to his tent and disappeared. Then said Hewitt (I translate): "You're not all Lees here, I see?"

"Yes pal, all Lees."

"But he's not a Lee," and Hewitt jerked his head toward the tent.

"Why not a Lee, pal? We be Lees and he is with us. Thus he is a Lee."

"Oh yes, of course. But I know he is from over the pawny. Come, I'll guess the tem (country) he comes from—it's Roumania, eh? Perhaps the Wallachian part."

The men looked at one another, then old Lee said: "You're right, pal—you're cloverer than we took you for. That is what they calls his tem. He is a petulengro (smith), and he comes with us to shoe the grics (horses) and mend the vardoes (vans). But he is with us and so is a Lee."

The talk and the smoke went on, and presently the man with the broken shoe returned and lay down again. Then, when the whisky had all gone, and Hewitt, with some excuse that I did not understand, had begged a piece of cord from one of the men, we left in a chorus of kooshto ratties (good night).

By this time it was nearly ten o'clock. We walked briskly till we came back again to the inn where we had bought the whisky. Here Hewitt, after some little trouble, succeeded in hiring a village cart, and while the driver was harnessing the horse cut a couple of short sticks from the hedge. These, being each divided into two, made four short, stout pieces of something less than six inches long each. Then Hewitt joined them together in pairs, each pair being connected from center to center by about nine or ten inches of the cord he had brought from the gypsies' camp. This done, he handed one pair to me. "Handcuffs," he explained, "and no bad ones, either. See—you use them so," and he passed the cord round my wrist, gripping the two handles and giving them a slight twist that sufficiently convinced me of the excruciating pain that might be inflicted by a vigorous turn, and the utter helplessness of a prisoner thus secured in the hands of captors prepared to use their instruments.

"Whom are these for?" I asked. "The man with the broken shoe?"

Hewitt nodded. "Yes," he said. "I expect we shall find him out alone about midnight. You know how to use these now."

It fully eleven before the cart was ready and we started. A quarter of a mile or so from the gypsy encampment Hewitt stopped the cart, and gave the driver instructions to wait. We got through the hedge and made our way on the soft ground behind it, in the direction of the vans and the tent.

"Roll up your handkerchief," Hewitt whispered, "into a tight pad. The moment I grab him, ram it into his mouth—well in, mind, so that it doesn't easily fall out. Probably he will be stooping—that will make it easier; we can pull him suddenly backward. Now be quiet."

We kept on till nothing but the hedge divided us from the space whereon stood the encampment. It was now nearer twelve o'clock than eleven, but the time we waited seemed endless. But time is not eternity, after all, and at last we heard a noise in the tent. A minute after the man we sought was standing before us. He made straight for a gap in the hedge which we had passed on our way, and we crouched low and waited. He emerged on our side of the hedge, with his back toward us, and began walking as we had walked, behind the hedge, but in the opposite direction. We followed.

He carried something in his hand that looked like a large bundle of sticks and twigs, and he appeared as anxious to be secret as we ourselves. From time to time he stopped and listened; fortunately there was no moon, or in turning about as he did once or twice he would have observed us. The field sloped downward just before us and there was another hedge at right angles, leading down to a slight hollow. To this hollow the man made his way, and in the shade of the new hedge we followed. Presently he stopped suddenly, stooped and deposited his bundle on the ground before him. Crouching before it, he produced matches from his pocket, struck one, and in a moment had a fire of twigs and small branches that sent up a heavy white smoke. What all this portended I could not imagine. In a sense of the weirdness of the whole adventure came upon me unchecked. The horrible corpse in the wood with its severed wrist, Hewitt's enigmatical forebodings, the mysterious trading of the man with the broken shoe, the scene around the gypsies' fire, and now the strange behavior of this man, whose connection with the tragedy was so intimate, and yet so inexplicable—all these things contributed to make up a tale of but a few hours' duration, but of an inscrutable impressiveness that I began to feel in my nerves.

The man bent a thin stick double, and, using it as a pair of tongs, held some indistinguishable object over the flames before him. Excited as I was I could not help noticing that he bent and held the stick with his left hand. We crept stealthily nearer, and as I stood scarcely three yards behind him and looked over his shoulder the form of the object stood out clear and black against the dull red of the flame. It was a human hand.

SPRING TERM

HERE'S APRIL.

Now Purify the Blood; Feed the Nerves!

Take Paine's Celery Compound Now!

It Speedily Makes People Well.

Cures Disease When All Else Fails.

In Every Civilized Land It is a Blessing.

Is Used by Physicians in Every Community.

Indorsed by Thousands of People in Plainfield.

In every civilized country people are now taking Paine's celery compound.

Persons employed constantly indoors emerge from the long confinement of winter reduced in strength and nervous vitality. The need of a spring medicine for years impressed itself on the attention of a thinking people.

But with a lack of a really valuable scientific preparation people were accustomed to take all sorts of home-made concoctions—some harmless, but none of any great value.

Finally, in the famous labratory of Dartmouth medical school, Prof. Edward E. Phelps, M. D. LL. D., discovered the formula of Paine's celery compound, the remedy that has become the standard nerve restorer, blood purifier and strengthener from one end of the country to the other, the preparation that stands unrivalled as—

The world's great spring remedy.

Not only is this known to the people generally today, but is the one remedy invariably ordered by the modern class of physicians in all cases of nervous debility.

Since the appearance of Paine's celery compound, when first prescribed by Prof Phelps, there has been no difference of opinion among scientific men as to its unrivalled merits

The reports of the many cases where this remarkable remedy has saved life and restored health, have again and again been given at length in the medical reviews and the newspapers, until today the whole country is familiar with the power of Paine's celery compound over disease. More than one influential paper has spoken in editorial columns of this great modern remedy as a remarkable instance of a scientific discovery, emanating from the very highest medical authority, and taken up later by the whole people, till today it is the recognized remedy of the world for all forms of weakness.

No such complete agreement of the popular belief and professional judgment ever before happened.

Just now, when the new year—that is the spring—is overhauling the body and trying to arouse it to drive out disease, it is well to know what to do in order to help the good work along. When the nerves count up the gains and losses of the winter, most every one is sure to find that he stands in need of a spring medicine to tone him up, to make richer and purer blood, and to make his nerves sound and vigorous. The marvelous ability of rapidly reconstructing worn-out tissues, of purifying the blood and feeding tired nerves has won for Paine's celery compound the written endorsement of thousands of careful physicians.

It is a fact much commented on that men and women of national reputation and prominence, educated people, who are careful what they employ when sick, have of their own accord sent letters describing fully their permanent recovery from rheumatism, heart weakness, sleeplessness, debility, kidney troubles and from diseases of the stomach and liver.

In all these cases of recovery from serious disorders and the general feeble health that comes directly from a bad state of blood and impaired nerves, Paine's celery compound has always removed disease and established health again. It begins to give its great help immediately.

This is how it has made men and women come to speak of it as "the remedy that makes people well." This significant phrase has been repeated so often from mouth to mouth that it is now everywhere inseparably associated with Paine's celery compound, not only by the physicians who daily prescribe it, but by the thousands of ailing people, young and old, who go to it for aid and comfort.

Take it now.

THEY ARE AMERICANS.

Red Men Rejoice in the Success of Their Order.

The first anniversary exercises of Paugh-Caugh-Naugh-Sinque Tribe of Red Men in their rooms in the Elkwood Building last night was attended by at least three hundred. Many of those present were paleface visitors, whose presence made the event one of informality in which all mingled in a fraternal feeling.

The programme was opened with an overture by N. H. Guttman and Mrs. Schorb, followed by a short address by Vincent W. Nash. Mr. Nash spoke concerning the growth, the benefits, and the accomplishments of the order, furnishing many statistics in order that a clear comprehension of just what was being done could be had by those not acquainted with the organization.

Before closing he paid a delicate and merited compliment to the auxiliary, the Daughters of Pocohontas. Much of the present efficiency of the society, he said, was materially aided by the loyal work of the women.

Next came a ballad, entitled "Believe Me", rendered by C. A. Roberts in a well modulated voice, such as to win applause from the audience.

F. W. Splane, in his Irish comicalities, told in a ludicrous manner of the trials and tribulations of a boy of the Emerald Isle who was compelled, for his own comfort, to go to a dentist to have a molar extracted. Mr. Splane possesses a brogue which makes his impersonations very realistic.

For a young lad, A. Wagener, accompanied by Mrs. Buckley on the piano, displayed considerable musical ability on the banjo.

A duet, entitled "Mrs. and Mr. Snibbs", was sang by Mrs. A. D. Pope and Eli Odam, in which the story of a twentieth century woman was told, in which man, poor man, was in a pitiable state of henpeckedness.

Great Sachem Foresight of Jersey City closed the first part with a short talk. He stated that the present Independent Order of Red Men found its origin way back among the continental soldiers, who banded themselves together, and by the use of a few simple signs, were able to help one another. The organization was, therefore, essentially an American one. In the State of New Jersey it had grown in membership in a few years from 7,000 to 17,000. Speaking of Paugh-Caugh-Naugh-Sinque tribe he thought that it had had a remarkable growth, and was today one of the strongest tribes in the reservation, notwithstanding that it is but one year in existence. He considered that the Red Men were the coming fraternal organization of the American continent.

After a violin and piano recitation was given by the Higham Brothers, another talk was made by Great Sanap Smyth of Long Branch. He spoke in a felicitous manner, particularly of the women, and described in an entertaining way how he thought the initiation of a man into the Degree of Pocohontas was conducted by the squaws. All of this was funny, when, as Chairman of Degree of Pocohontas Craig said afterward, a man can always talk more of what he does n't know than of what he does know.

"Swim Out O'Grady" was sung by A. D. Pope, after which Miss Beulah Waters recited "Our Brave Foreman" in a voice that evinced elocutionary ability for one so young. She was compelled to respond to an encore.

The "Vagabond" was sung by L. S. Bond, and then came John H. Carney. He was scheduled on the programme as "Just a Duchman". In a rich dialect he told the audience "vat he dinks", and his thinks caught the audience just right, for a constant titter, sometimes bursting into a hearty haw-haw, gave evidence that his refined humor was driving dull care and all that "tired feeling" away. All of his jokes were fresh and opportune to the occasion, and as a finale to his number he recited a ludicrous burlesque on the drama of today. Long and hearty applause greeted his efforts, but he refused to respond to the encore, doubtless feeling that the programme had been extended too long already.

Dr. G. R. Bedford sang the "Sidewalks of Plainfield", a parody on the "Sidewalks of New York", followed with a duet by Miss Buela Waters and Master Pope, which was charmingly rendered.

After a short talk by Brother Craig on the Degree of Pocohontas, the programme was closed by E. M. Adams singing the "Alabama Coon."

The dancing hall and supper room were then opened, and until late this morning the Red Men and their visitors made merry in tripping the light fantastic toe. Supper was also served on the floor above.

All who were in attendance went away pleased with the entertainment provided, and wishing Paugh-Caugh-Naugh-Sinque tribe many more happy moons of increasing growth and influence.

I recommend Chamberlain's Pain Balm for rheumatism, lame back, sprains and swellings. There is no better liniment made. I have sold over 100 bottles of it this year and all were pleased who used it. SAFER THAN WAGONS.

The Trolley Is Not a Menace to People in the Street.

The extension of the trolley system in Plainfield should be determined from ascertained facts instead of overworked imaginations.

In the first place, the difference between a town of 12 000 people covering a great deal of ground, and a city containing one million people, should be recognized, not persistently ignored. In the next place, the want of fenders and proper regulations as to speed in Brooklyn should be kept in mind—at least, systems so managed—mismanaged is the word—should not be arrayed to defeat a system that is to be supplied as a charter condition with approved fenders and all other safeguards. Trolley cars properly equipped and managed are no more dangerous to life or limb than so many private vehicles; and we point to the records of the almost innumerable trolleys in the narrow and crowded streets of Boston as proof positive of this statement.

But there is no need to go to Boston or elsewhere for proof. We have two lines in operation, one of them passing a large and crowded public school in North Plainfield, and both traversing the most crowded section of the town. Are the two lines slaughtering children or other innocents? Are they a nuisance, an annoyance to anybody? Could the people in the streets in which they are laid be induced by love or money to part with them? There are no overworked imaginations on Somerset street, or West Front street, or Seventh street, or Grant avenue. They have the trolley, and are mighty glad of it.

This is the story of the trolley wherever it has been introduced. Even fenderless—until recently—Brooklyn could not be induced to abolish the trolley. We present the cold facts. Facts should be given a chance, and the vivid imaginations of West Fourth street and Woodland avenue should take a rest.

A Delightful Sociable.

A very delightful evening was enjoyed by all those who attended the sociable given by the Young Ladies' Mission Band of the First Methodist Church in Vincent Chapel on Tuesday. Quite a number were present despite the inclement weather, and everyone pronounced the affair a great success.

After a period of sociability, each person present drew a slip of paper from a hat and drew on a blackboard the object named there. Each guessed and handed in their guess. J. Vincent Rittenhouse was the most successful at this game while Miss Edna French and Charles B Morse took second and third prize.

"Observation" was the next game played, and in this Everett J. Peck proved to be the most observing. Benjamin C. Bowers, Jr., and Charles B. Morse tied for the second best list.

After the game of "Predicament", sandwiches, chocolate and cake were served, and everyone enjoyed a social time. Later in the evening "Telegrams" was played, and Raymond A McGee and J. Vincent Rittenhouse distinguished themselves by their brilliant telegrams.

Another period of sociability brought a charming evening to a close.

The programme and the refreshments were under the control of Miss Alice M Whitney, Miss Mandane Hyde, Miss Eva Jenkins, and Miss Alice Jenkins, who certainly deserve much credit for the enjoyable manner in which the sociable was conducted.

A Yale Dinner.

A Yale dinner was given at the home of Mr and Mrs Henry A McGee yesterday by their son Harry, in honor of his classmates Frank Brooks, Robert Hincks and Nathan Symth, who are spending their Easter vacation with him. Those present beside the host and Yale guests were: Lewis Waring and Everett Dwight, of Plainfield, and Misses Florence Waring, Florence Abbott, Carrie Vail, Gertrude Andrews, Catherine Rinehart and Bertha Clark. The dining room looked very pretty with violets and Easter lilies, the dominating color being the Yale blue, which lent a happy effect to the scene.

To Swell Dressers.

McGregor & Company of 850 Broad street, Newark, have a word to say to swell dressers in an advertisement which appears in another column of today's Press, and they lay particular stress upon ready-made suits. It must be a peculiarly constructed man who cannot be well fitted at McGregor's, for their prices are much lower than the majority. You can't make any mistake when you go to McGregor's.

Our better halves say they could not keep house without Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. It is used in more than half the homes in Leeds, Sims Bros., Leeds, Iowa. This shows the esteem in which that remedy is held where it has been sold for years and is well known. Mothers have learned that there is nothing so good for colds, croup and whooping cough, that it cures these ailments quickly and permanently, and that it is pleasant and safe for children to take. 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy, Park and North aves. WHAT A QUARTER WILL DO.

25 Cents a Day Provides a Home for the Independent Wage-Earner.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE DAILY PRESS: The condition of affairs in the matters of labor and wages, for the last year, has brought out distinctly one or two points that should not be lightly forgotten. One is the folly of spending all of one's surplus in unnecessary ways, or for things that minister solely to present enjoyment, leaving nothing for an emergency. Another is the constant recurrence of certain inevitable expenses in the household, particularly that of rent, which might be provided against by this wasted surplus. Our building and loan associations bring together this expense and this surplus, in such a way, that, for twenty-five cents saved from each day's earnings, a man now renting a $2,000 house may buy it and pay for it in 16 years, and so will have stopped the drain for rent, and practically added that much to his surplus earnings, having had the same use of the house as if he had simply paid rent. There are many who do not know the working of this plan, and for their benefit, we enter into a little explanation.

The first step is to accumulate a fund for the "margin" required of borrowers.

Twenty-five cents for each working day is $6.50 per month, which will more than pay the dues on six shares in the Building and Loan Association.

This payment, continued for five years, amounts to $360, and will have earned $72, thus allowing the member to withdraw $432. This will pay $400 on his $2,000 house, allowing him enough to pay all necessary legal expenses. This leaves a balance of $1,600 due on the house. He then subscribes for eight shares, against which he borrows the ultimate value of the shares, $1,600. His monthly payment to the Association will be:

Dues on eight shares	$ 8 00
Interest	8 00
Premium at say 2) cents per month	1 60
	$ 17 60

Now the rent of a $2,000 house can hardly be less than 9 per cent of its value, $160 per year, or $15 a month.

To monthly rent	$ 15 00
Add monthly savings	6 50
	$ 21 50

There will be a balance of $3 90 per month, or $46 80 per year, to meet such expenses as insurance, taxes and repairs. Look for a moment at the results in the two cases:

197 months rent at $15	$2,955
Resultant value	0,000

60 months rent at $15 (accumulating margin)	$ 900
60 months dues at $6	360
137 months payments to Building and Loan at $17.60	2,411
Insurance, say	84
Taxes	250
Repairs	150
	$4,155
Resultant Value	$2,000
Which has been paid by the difference between	$4,155
and	$2,955
	$1,200

Which is just the equivalent for 25 cents per day for 16 years of 300 working days each.

Having accomplished this, you have provided a home for the balance of your life, and a shelter for your family, when you are taken from them, and now have an amount of $17.60 per month, which may be used either for further savings in the same line, and for similar purposes, or for the increased comfort of yourself and family. Is it worth while to try?

Cranford's Small Baby Dead.

The very little girl who was born in Cranford March 2, died last night. At birth she only weighed 2½ pounds, and when a fortnight old only 3½ pounds. She was so small and frail that it was thought that she would have to be put into an incubator, but as none was handy she was placed in a basket about fourteen inches long, between two bottles filled with warm water. She got along nicely for a while, but she was really so very little that there was not much hope of her being brought up. All the women in Cranford were interested in the infant, and they will be sorry to hear that she is no more.

—The ladies of Grace M. E. Church are arranging for an entertainment to consist of a number of tableaux. The event will take place April 25.

Those who never read the advertisements in their newspapers miss more than they presume. Jonathan Kenison, of Bolan, Worth Co., who had been troubled with rheumatism in his back, arms and shoulders, read an item in his paper about how a prominent German citizen of Fort Madison had been cured. He procured the same medicine, and to use his own words: "It cured me right up." He also says: A neighbor and his wife were both sick in bed with rheumatism. Their boy was over to my house and said they were so bad that he had to do the cooking. I told him of Chamberlain's Pain Balm and how it had cured me, he procured a bottle of it and it cured them up in a week. 50 cent bottles for sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy, Park and North aves. T. S. AT REST.

Harry B. Finney.

The funeral services of the late Harry B. Finney, eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Finney of Manning avenue, were held from Warren Chapel, North Plainfield, yesterday afternoon, when a very large number of friends and relatives gathered to witness the solemn ceremonies conducted by Rev. Mr. McKelvey.

Appropriate Scripture selections were read, after which a most impressive prayer was offered. Mr. McKelvey said in part: "Our minds go back to a time in Christ's life when he was going to Jerusalem, and passing through a certain city he saw a funeral procession and was sorrowful. He was particularly impressed, as it was the funeral of the only son of a widow of Israel. In those times it was considered especially unfortunate when there was no son in a family, and to have a son and lose him was a most unfortunate circumstance. The occasion today is similar, and particularly sad because the dead one was a promising youth. He was a joy and comfort to his father and mother, and I have been told he never caused them a moment of uneasiness. There was nothing in his life that caused the parents worry or sorrow. He led the kind of a life that all young men should live. It did n't take Christ long to discover the sorrowing one in that funeral procession of old, and it's the same today. He is with us always as He was when upon earth. Christ not only saw the woman, but He was moved with compassion, and he comforted her. The words 'weep not' were spoken in sympathy. Tears are God-given, as the vent to sorrow, but He was going to help her, and therefore the words 'weep not'. He stopped the procession, and called 'young man, I say arise!' and then he restored to the sorrowing widow her only son. The Easter season is upon us, a time when the world dwells on Christ's death, sacrifice and resurrection, for our help and strength. The time will come when He shall say to all 'Arise!' He will restore our loved ones if we only trust and love Him, and the family circle will re-unite never to be broken again. Let us remember these Easter thoughts, and may they help us to live better lives for Christ's sake, and may God help us to accept His Son."

An opportunity was then given for those present to take a parting look on the one they had loved so well. The body lay as peacefully as though merely asleep, in a white casket covered with beautiful flowers, consisting of a large pillow of roses bearing the words "Our darling Harry," a smaller pillow of choice flowers, a bunch of white roses, tied with white ribbon, a pretty wreath of roses and pinks, and a star of roses and lilies. The last named was from the carrier boys of The Daily Press, of which circle decedent was one. The other floral tributes were from loving friends.

The pall-bearers were carriers of The Daily Press, Chauncey Colthar, John Vroom, Benj. Schenck, Chauncey Stout, Clarence Brokaw, and Clifford Braider.

Interment was in the North Plainfield Cemetery.

Doll Social.

Sociables are very enjoyable occasions, especially when arranged by the Women's Society for Christian Work of the Seventh-Day Baptist Church. Last evening, in the church parlors, they entertained their friends with a "doll social".

The usual excellent supper was first served in the reception room and then the programme began. The first was a recitation by Miss Kizzy Naegle, and which followed the event of the evening, a "doll" drill. Ten little girls marched into the room carrying their dolls; after walking about the room they went through a number of different actions and finished by kneeling and rocking their babies to sleep. Then they tiptoed out of the room. This novel drill was loudly encored, but the applause was twice as great when they returned and with a whispered "hush" motioned that the babies were fast asleep.

Among those who took part in this pleasing little representation were the Misses Grace Van Sickle, Louise Van-Sickle, Nellie Miller, Helen Mitchell, Isie Randolph, Bessie Gorton, Grace Weeks, and Marie Rogers.

A recitation by Miss Nellie Miller closed the evening's programme, and all enjoyed an hour of social chat.

This novel, but very successful entertainment was arranged by Miss Lulu Lewis and Miss Elizabeth Titsworth. The supper was under the able control of Mrs. D. E. Titsworth and Mrs. A. M. Maxson. All deserve credit for a very pleasant sociable.

—In his next talk at the Y. M. C. A., April 18, Charles Bullman will tell of the great ransom of a barbaric king.

It will be an agreeable surprise to persons subject to attacks of bilious colic to learn that prompt relief may be had by taking Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. In many instances the attack may be prevented by taking this remedy as soon as the first symptoms of the disease appear. 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy, Park and North aves. PLAINFIELD FIREMEN ARE QUICK.

They Give a Splendid Exhibition to Insurance Experts Here in Plainfield to Remain Unchanged.

A preliminary meeting of special agents representing the leading fire insurance companies was held in the Board of Trade rooms this morning. It was called for the purpose of talking over the insurance rate for Plainfield, and hearing complaints from the local agents in relation thereto.

After a lengthy and heated discussion, it was decided to leave the rates as they are at present. Rates on the Babcock Building were discussed.

When the business was concluded, the representatives were given an invitation by Louis G. Timpson, President of the Underwriters, to witness an exhibition of the fire department. They were taken to Central avenue and Seventh street, where Mr. Timpson pulled Box 32. The time of responses was as follows: Alerts and No. 2 hose wagons, 2 minutes; with water, 2:50. Engine No. 2, 2:15. Truck, 3:35.

A second alarm was sent in for No. 1 hose; the time made was 2:25. The distance is close to ¾ of a mile, and the agents were highly pleased with the remarkably quick work of the department. The firemen knew nothing of the test beforehand.

A pressure of 74 lbs. was secured on the water test, which was very satisfactory. Mr. Timpson then escorted the visitors to the Country Club, where lunch was served.

The visitors were: Mr. Hawes of the Liverpool, London and Globe, Mr. Stevens of the Phœnix, Mr. Wilson of the Hanover, Mr. Ballard of the Palatine, Mr. Jones of the Queen, Mr. Ballard of the London, Mr. West of the Norwich Union, Mr. Hoadley of the American, Mr. Walsh of the Union, Mr. Prentiss of the Home, Mr. Murray of the German-American.

THE TROPHY HERE.

Plainfield Won It by Clever Skill and Pure Sportsmanship.

The handsome trophy which was won by the Plainfield bowlers in the Watchung League series, against Somerville, Bound Brook and Finderne, was brought to Plainfield last evening by Mr. Reynolds of Finderne, Mr. Gulick, and Mr. Bennett of Somerville, and the formal presentation to Plainfield was made.

The team and their friends gathered in the parlors of the Board of Trade, where in a very happy manner Mr. Reynolds on behalf of the League presented the trophy. He said that the contest had been a most pleasant one, and he hoped that another year it would be continued. He was of the opinion that John Petrie was responsible for the success of the Plainfielders.

Captain Harry L. VanEmburgh on behalf of the Plainfield club responded, thanking the visitors and the other teams in the League for the courteous treatment the team had received, and he was especially thankful that the trophy had been won in a pure sportsmanlike way, and not on technicalities as was the case in the Journal contest. He said the team appreciated exceedingly the fair treatment given them by the Elizabeth Journal, but they would never enter another contest with the Y. M. C. L. A., as he did not think they were in the same class with the other teams.

Vice-President Teel was then introduced, and spoke appropriate words. Mr. Bennett and Mr. Gulick also were called on, and responded in their usual happy manner. John Petrie was urged to make a speech, but words failed him.

An adjournment was then made to the room in the rear, where Caterer Stephenson served an excellent collation. Clay pipes and tobacco were liberally distributed, and thoroughly enjoyed by all.

During the social time, the contest was reviewed in detail with much enjoyment.

The trophy consists of three pins, on the top of which rests a ball. It is particular significant in view of the fact that the contest was won by three pins.

The event last evening was a very happy one. It closed with several friendly games on the alleys, and then the visitors left for home.

BEHRING SEA CLAIMS

Fictitious Values Not Put on Canadian Vessels.

Total Amount But Half of a Just and Reasonable Allowance—A Reply to Senator Morgan's Speech To Be Laid Before the House of Commons.

London, April 11.—The Earl of Kimberley, secretary of state for foreign affairs, will probably lay before the house of commons an elaborate reply to Senator Morgan's speech in the United States senate on the Behring sea question. The reply was prepared by Sir Julian Pauncefote, the British ambassador at Washington, and criticises Mr. Morgan's statements, intending to show them to be erroneous in fact, in many particulars, and unjust in their conclusions.

Disputes Mr. Morgan's Statements.

The subject is handled in the form of a report from Sir Julian on the status of negotiations for paying claims of masters of Canadian sealers seized in Behring sea. It disputes the statement of Mr. Morgan that fictitious values had been put on some of the vessels and cargoes seized, and that interest was included. The total amount will be declared to be but half of a just and reasonable allowance, and to have been agreed to as a compromise against the wish of the Canadian masters, although they finally agreed to a reduction of their claims. The subject will be presented to parliament mainly for the purpose of correcting alleged misapprehensions created by Mr. Morgan's statements in the American congress.

JETTISONED THE CARGO.

Even Then the Alvena Had a Close Call from Going Down.

Norfolk, Va., April 11.—The British steamship Alvena, Capt. Dow, bound from Kingston to New York, with passengers and general cargo, has arrived here leaking. On the 7th, when in latitude 31:04, longitude 74:16, and with a heavy sea running, a large plate fell from the bottom of the steamer and the whole of the after compartments were soon full of water up to the second deck. Three steam pumps and one hand pump were at once put to work, but they could not free the vessel.

Valuable Cargo Jettisoned.

The passengers became excited. About 240 tons of the steamer's cargo, consisting of coffee, sugar and honey, was thrown overboard, but even this did not help much. The cargo jettisoned is estimated to be worth about $24,000. The boats were cleared away and provisioned ready for launching, but fortunately were not needed. The Alvena arrived here safely and is now anchored off Atlantic City.

FOX WILL CASE SETTLED.

After Twenty-six Months' Litigation a Compromise Is Reached.

Hartford, Conn., April 11.—The famous Fox will case, after being in the courts for twenty-six months, was settled out of court yesterday. In a few days the property will be distributed among the beneficiaries. The compromise was effected through the efforts of Amos Hathaway, of Boston, the attorney of Frank D. Somers, the Boston tailor, who under the will of Major Fox was bequeathed the sum of $25,000 besides other bequests to himself and family. It is said that the sum of $7,250 was paid the appellant, or 3½ per cent. of the estate.

Y., and was a daughter of the late Robert Freeburn. TRAIN ROBBER PERRY ESCAPES

Assaults the Keepers and with Four Others Breaks from the Asylum.

Poughkeepsie, N. Y., April 11.—Perry, the noted train robber, whose exploits a few years ago, while trying to rob the car of the American Express company on the New York Central railroad, caused great excitement at the time, with four other inmates of the Matteawan state asylum, escaped from the institution at a late hour last night. They assaulted a keeper and escaped through the scuttle. The names of the men are McGuire, O'Donnell, Quigley and Davis. All were dressed alike.

WILL AGAIN PRODUCE HAMLET.

Anna Dickinson Declares Her Intention of Returning to the Stage.

Scranton, Pa., April 11.—The failure of the jury in the Anna Dickinson suit to agree and the information that a majority of the jurymen held out for a verdict for Miss Dickinson, caused considerable surprise, particularly after Judge Acheson's charge, which was strongly against the plaintiff. The judge said, in discharging the jury, that he was led to do so only because of the death of the wife of one of the jurymen.

Jurymen Call on Miss Dickinson.

Before they left for their homes eight jurymen who voted for Miss Dickinson went to the Wyoming house and each sent up to Miss Dickinson a printed jury list with his name checked off and the word "Friend" written upon the margin. Miss Dickinson was ill and could not see them. She was disappointed that there was not a verdict one way or the other, and the thoughts of going through another such trial are said to have brought on nervous prostration.

Will Again Produce Hamlet.

Anna was seen by the reporters last evening. She showed no sign of her indisposition of the morning. She declared that she has consented to deliver a lecture before leaving this city and she proposes to again go on the stage and produce Hamlet.

Albany, April 11.—Attorney General Hancock has received an opinion from Meyer Nussbaum of this city on the right of a state officer to ride on a pass issued by the Wagner Drawing-room Car company in their cars. He holds that notwithstanding the fact that the Wagner company is not a railroad corporation, still its functions are those of a common carrier, and such being the case, public officers are prohibited from riding on passes issued by the company. The case will be appealed.

LIGHTNING PLAYS HAVOC.

No Less Than Ten Places Struck at Athol, Mass.

Athol, Mass., April 11.—Tuesday night's storm rained havoc with everything here, lightning striking in not less than ten places. At Edmund Page's house it was the worst. There were eight persons in the house at the time, but none were injured, although every room was damaged. The running gear of the Athol and Orange electric cars was damaged so as to stop traffic. The river is higher than for years, and at places between here and Orange the road is about three feet under water.

Pittsburg, April 11.—Oil is still on the boom. The Standard have raised their purchasing price for Pennsylvania from $1.26 to $1.35. This is an advance of 25 cents a barrel in the last week. The cause of the excitement is generally admitted to be sheer exhaustion of the known fields for what is called Pennsylvania oil. The price is expected to keep steadily rising during the summer.

NEW INCOME TAX CLASH

Constitution Is Against Taxing the President.

The Same with the Supreme Court Justices—Their Salaries Not To Be Diminished, Yet the Income Tax Act Levies on All Salaries of United States Officials.

Washington, April 11.—The collection of the income tax on the salaries of government officers who receive more than $4,000 a year will probably be fraught with many embarrassing complications. Already a question has arisen as to whether it is constitutional to deduct from the annual salary of the president of the United States the $920 which will be his share of contribution to the revenues under the two per cent. assessment.

A Direct Conflict.

The federal constitution expressly provides (with the quaint spelling that prevailed at that time) that the compensation of the president "shall neither be increased nor diminished during the period for which he shall have been elected." A direct conflict with this provision is contained in section 33, of the tariff law, which says "that there shall be levied, collected and paid on all salaries of officers, or payments for services to persons in the civil, military, naval or other employment or service of the United States, including senators and representatives and delegates in congress when exceeding the rate of $4,000 per annum, a tax of two per centum, etc."

Are They Protected from the Tax?

A deduction of the income tax from the president's salary is construed to be a diminution and, therefore, contrary to the constitutional provision quoted. This matter will undoubtedly be brought to the attention of the comptroller of the treasury for decision. The application of the principle given is the same with reference to all federal judges appointed for life. Their salaries are apparently protected from the income tax by a constitutional provision that their compensation shall not be diminished during their continuance in office. Federal judges appointed for a stated term, however, will probably be obliged to pay the tax through deductions of the requisite amounts from their salaries.

President Files His Statement.

Nearly every one of the officers of the government who receives a compensation of more than $4,000 per year has been busy since the supreme court decision was rendered in making up a statement of his income for transmission to the collector of internal revenue in the district where he has legal residence. The president is understood to have sent in his statement, and Private Secretary Thurber lost no time in doing likewise.

ANOTHER TEST CASE.

Suit To Restrain a Railroad from Paying the Income Tax.

New York, April 11.—The income tax law will again be tested in the United States courts, this time in a suit brought by Charles Allen against the Illinois Central railroad, in which it is asked that the railroad be restrained from paying the income tax on the ground that the $4,000 exemption is unconstitutional. Allen lives in Greenfield, Mass., and the suit is brought in the United States court of this district. Allen is supposed to represent some big opponents of the tax, inasmuch as he owns only five shares of the railroad stock. The suit will be conducted by Seward, Guthrie, Morawetz & Steele, with Joseph H. Choate as associate counsel. Allen alleges that his income from the railroad stock is less than $4,000 a year, and says that his income will be reduced considerably if the tax is paid.

War Against Trolley Cars.

Brooklyn, N. Y., April 11.—Nearly 2,500 persons crowded into Prospect hall last night, where an indignation meeting was called by the citizens of this city to protest against the trolley roads. Resolutions were adopted calling on the mayor and aldermen to take effective steps to stop the murders caused by the trolley cars, and recommending that the speed of the cars be not over six miles an hour in the city.

FOOTBALL IS NOT DEAD

Harvard Will Give the Game Another Chance.

The Overseers Declare That It Must Be Reformed, and Assert the Authority of the Athletic Committee. Strong Opposition To Abolishing the Game Entirely.

Boston, April 11.—At the meeting of the board of overseers of Harvard college yesterday the football question was the principal topic of discussion. The members voted "that in the judgment of the board of overseers, the decision of the question of the continuance of the abolition of intercollegiate football at the university is within the powers of the athletic committee under the standing rule of the president, fellows and the board of overseers."

Victory for Football.

It was further voted "that in the opinion of the board of overseers intercollegiate football at the university should be abolished when it is shown that the existing serious evils and abuses of the game cannot be corrected." The vote of the overseers is a victory for intercollegiate football. The athletic committee will now be given an opportunity to revise the rules and the game will be given another trial.

Did Not Want To Abolish It.

There was a strong opposition manifested in the meeting of the overseers to abolish the game entirely. This was evident as soon as the matter was broached. One of the overseers stated, after the meeting, that the temper of the board was such that no resolution abolishing the game could possibly have passed had it been presented. All those who spoke on the subject at the meeting admitted that evils existed, and evils of such a nature that should they be continued the game would be doomed. All the speakers were in favor of attempting to make the necessary reforms in the game rather than to have it discontinued as a college sport.

Must Be Reformed.

Dr. McKenzie, the secretary of the board, said, after the meeting: "This means that the board has asserted the authority of the athletic committee. The board says the game must be reformed, and as the athletic committee has said the same thing the vote means the board has given the committee more power to reform it."

JAIL FOR SCHWEINFURTH.

Unless the Self-Styled Messiah Satisfies a $50,000 Verdict.

Chicago, April 11.—If George Jacob Schweinfurth, the self-styled Messiah, who runs a "heaven" near Rockford, Ill., cannot be compelled to satisfy the judgment for $50,000 obtained by George W. Coudery for alienation of his wife's affections, the attorneys for the wronged husband will have him kept in the county jail at the expense of their client to see if jail rations and a cell for an indefinite period will induce Schweinfurth to satisfy the judgment of the jury. Word came from Rockford to-day that he claimed to have no property, and it is alleged that his estate is in the names of his "angles."

CARLISLE FOR THE SENATE.

A Close Friend Says He Will Surely Be a Candidate.

Lexington, Ky. April 11.—The Leader publishes an interview with a Kentuckian just returned from Washington, who is close to Secretary Carlisle and family, and who says that the secretary will surely be a candidate for senator from Kentucky to succeed Blackburn. Mrs. Carlisle, it is said, never favored the idea of Carlisle going into the cabinet, and is now anxious for him to be returned to the senate. Mr. Blackburn is quoted in Washington as saying that Mr. Carlisle would be his most dangerous competitor.

Penal Investigation.

Trenton, N. J., April 11.—Gov. Werts has named Charles T. Lewis of Morristown, Francis B. Lee and the Rev. Geo. C. Maddock of Trenton, Z. K. Pangborn of Jersey City, and P. P. Baker of Vineland as the commissioners under the act of the legislature to visit the penal institutions of Massachusetts and investigate the system of parole and probation in that state.

Rewarded for Gallantry.

Washington, April 11.—The president has awarded a medal of honor to second lieutenant J. H. Pinkham, Fifty-seventh Massachusetts volunteers, for most distinguished gallantry in the assault on Fort Stedman, Va., March 25, 1865. In this action Lieutenant Pinkham captured, with his own hands, the battle-flag of the Fifty-seventh North Carolina infantry.

Portsmouth Still Well Guarded.

Portsmouth, N. H., April 11.—Judge Doe has refused to grant an injunction against the police commissioners and the new police force. The situation remains practically unchanged and the old force will not give up unless the court enjoins them from doing duty.

To Command French Forces.

Paris, April 11.—General Duchesne, who will command the French forces in Madagascar, left Paris for the south last evening to embark. He was accompanied to the station by the minister of war and many other high officers.

SPRING FRESHETS.

High Waters Causing Destruction at Many Points.

Lambertville, N. J., April 11.—The biggest freshet since the memorable one of 1862 is now raging in the Delaware. The water has backed up to the first floor of the Lambertville Paper mill, and valuable machinery will be ruined. Roughton's dyeing establishment is submerged, and much damage will result. Lear, Holcombe & Neces' flour mills are partly submerged, and much grain has been damaged. Their lumber yard is also under water, and quantities of lumber have drifted away. The damage in this vicinity will be heavy.

Worst Freshet Since '57.

Bordentown, N. J., April 11.—The worst freshet since 1857 is prevailing here. The Delaware river is double its width at this point and Penn's manor is a vast sheet of water. The locks and piers on the Delaware & Raritan canal are completely covered over and the steamers and canal boats are in a bad position. The gas works have been flooded and the city last night was in darkness. As this place is an important railroad junction many strangers are stranded on account of the railroad tracks being in bad shape. Many people who live near the shore have moved their goods to the high grounds.

Floods Around Pittsburg.

Pittsburg, April 11.—The heavy rains of the past few days have caused quite a rise in the rivers. The Allegheny is over its banks in several places above the city. The Pittsburg & Western railroad tracks in Allegheny are under one foot of water, but no serious damage is reported or expected.

Connecticut River Rising.

Brattleboro, Vt., April 11.—The Connecticut river is nearly at high water mark. Several washouts on the Hoosac Tunnel & Wilmington railroad has interrupted traffic on that line while trains on the New London Northern branch have been considerably delayed.

HE GAVE UP HIS BUSINESS.

A Young Firm in Boston Dissolved for a Novel Reason.

Boston, April 11.—The young firm of Lamson, Wolff & Co. has just been dissolved by mutual consent for a very novel reason. W. B. Wolff is a senior at Harvard college and the faculty has had its attention called to his connection with this firm and Mr. Wolff has been informed that he could not receive his degree if he remained in business. He promptly withdrew from the firm. Mr. E. R. Lamson, the other and elder partner, will continue business under the original name. This action of the faculty is not unprecedented, for Stone & Kimball, the young Chicago publishers, met with the same restriction from Harvard when they had a business house in Cambridge, before graduation.

MRS. MACK ARRESTED

Washington Detectives Arrive at Hamilton, Ont.

The Woman Was Employed by Morrison, the Stamp Counterfeiter, and the Dominion Officers Believed Her Innocent—She Is Shrewd and Has Little To Say.

Hamilton, Ont., April 11.—The following particulars have been ascertained regarding the Canadian Novelty Supply company charged with counterfeiting United States stamps. On April 1, a man giving his name as George Morrison, and who said he was engaged in buying and selling bankrupt stocks, engaged desk room in the store of Arthur S. Fish, a painter at No 22 King William street. Morrison installed in his office as his secretary a woman named Mrs. A. T. Mack, recently of east Twenty-third street, New York. The woman was given instructions and then Morrison departed ostensibly for the purpose of opening an office in Toronto.

A Woman in the Scheme.

Following out Morrison's instructions, Mrs. Mack wrote out an advertisement which was inserted in Printers Ink, 10 Spruce street, New York, offering to sell $115 worth of two-cent stamps for $100, as the seller had no use for them. The advertisement was identical with one which appeared in the Chicago Tribune and both advertisements brought numerous replies from would-be purchasers. Mrs. Mack was given several carefully sealed packages by Morrison, but claims she was not told what the packages contained. A few days ago she received a letter from Morrison from Buffalo instructing her to forward certain parcels to different addresses in Chicago. She complied with the request. Later on Mrs. Mack received another letter from Morrison saying that one of his agents would call upon her and receive all the money belonging to the concern and that the agent would identify himself by asking for $6.25.

Did Not Call for the Money.

Up to the present time, she says, this man has not called. It is certain that the Hamilton branch of the concern had been in operation for only a few days, and Mrs. Mack, who is in charge, was believed to be unaware of her employer's illegal business. There is nothing about the premises to suggest a probability that stamps were manufactured there, although several two-cent United States stamps were found lying in a pigeonhole of the desk. Mrs. Mack said that she did not know if they were genuine or not.

Mrs. Mack Is Shrewd.

Although the woman seemed to have no connection with the concern other than being in the employ of Morrison, she is very shrewd and will not divulge his address. While a reporter was conversing with Mrs. Mack a telegraph messenger arrived with a telegram addressed to the Canadian Novelty & Supply company. Mrs. Mack received the message and paid 50 cents charges. She then immediately inclosed it in an envelope and went out to mail it, presumably to Morrison.

Believes Her Innocent.

Postmaster Brown said they had been delivering letters to the Canadian Novelty and Supply company at 22 King William street, but he was certain that the concern had not been more than ten days in Hamilton. Police Inspector McMahon interviewed Mrs. Mack last evening, but could learn no new facts in relation to the business of the concern or to the whereabouts of Morrison. He said he believed that the woman had no previous knowledge of the counterfeiting business carried on by Morrison.

Washington Detectives Arrive.

Late last night two detectives connected with the Washington secret service bureau reached here and after learning all the facts in possession of the local authorities they interviewed Mrs. Mack at the office of the Canadian Novelty Supply company. The woman was not very communicative and the American officers became convinced that she knew more about Morrison's swindling schemes and his whereabouts than she was willing to acknowledge. After an hour's consideration the woman was arrested and locked up at midnight.

Heavy Penalty Prescribed.

The Canadian criminal code provides that any one is guilty of an indictable offense and liable to 14 years' imprisonment who fraudulently counterfeits any stamps used for the purpose of revenue by the government of the united kingdom, Canada or provinces, or any foreign province or state. The same penalty is also provided for selling or offering for sale or having plates or dies for making such stamps.

Struck by Lightning.

Litchfield, Conn., April 11.—The general store of Watts Brothers at Washington depot was struck by lightning about midnight and was destroyed by fire. A building owned by the railroad company was damaged about $1,000. The total loss to Watts Brothers is about $8,000, with little insurance.

EASTER LILIES.

In purple and crimson glory
The Easter sunlight poured
A flood through the chancel windows
In the temple of our Lord.
Its waves passed over the altar
To bathe the cross with their glow
And stain the lilies with crimson,
Like sunset over the snow

Till every fragrant chalice
Seemed filled to the brim with wine
Distilling there into vapor
And rising in clouds divine.
Farther and farther the incense
Its delicate perfume spread,
Like loving thoughts sent earthward
By souls of our happy dead.

With prayers from our hearts uprising
Which mingled and seemed to reach
Through the space 'twixt earth and heaven
So blending them each with each,
That my soul could feel the presence,
The smile and the tender eyes
Of one who gathers the lilies
In gardens of paradise.

CHURCH UNITY.

Plainfield Denominations Join in Good Friday Services.

Attention of Daily Press readers is renewed to the union services to be held tomorrow evening at 7:45 in the Methodist Episcopal Church. Nearly all the denominations of the city unite in this service, and make it an occasion of great interest. All are welcome, and cordially invited.

The following clergymen will speak briefly on the "Seven Words" from the Cross, in the following order: Revs. Newell, Herring, Schenck, Rodman, Richardson, Yerkes, and Goodrich. Doctors Richards and Barnes also will participate in the services.

This service is very much prized by the churches of the city, and usually brings together a large congregation. It is a beautiful expression of the liberality and kindliness of feeling that characterize the representatives of the different denominations.

Thought on Christ.

At the special service in the Congregational Church this evening the subject will be "Thought on Christ in His last night with His disciples before His death: what such a Saviour is to us". The Christian Endeavor societies of the city have been asked to join in this service. There will be special music. Miss Blair will sing a solo. H. J. Martin will lead the congregational singing.

It is not a new remedy, but its great nourishing powers are continually coming to light. The Hypophosphites add to the value of the Oil.

ORIGIN OF EASTER.

Queer Customs and Superstitions In All Countries.

The Egyptian Osiris was probably the prototype of the Latin goddess Aurora—the dawn—who was known to the Germans and Saxons as Ostara, or Eastre. The latter goddess was often worshiped with fire, probably as an emblem of the dawn—Osterfeuer. When Germany became Christianized, the new church did its best to trample out all the old pagan customs. But they could not do it. The Eastre festivals in particular had taken a deep hold on the hearts of the people, and the heads of the new church wisely decided to make the best of them. So they turned them into Christian observances instead of heathen rites. The people held fast to their eggs. Let them go they would not. They kept on coloring and giving them as presents quite as much as though they still worshiped the goddess Eastre.

One must go back to the Persians for their first observance of the egg day. Before their conversion to Mohammedanism the Persians reckoned the beginning of their new year from the day in which the sun enters Aries, which is in March. According to one of the ancient cosmoganies, all things were produced from an egg, hence called the mundane egg. This cosmogany was received in Persia, and on this account there obtained among the people of that country a custom of presenting each other with an egg, the symbol of a new beginning of time on every New Year's day—that is, on the day when the sun enters Aries.

Among the Jews the season of the ancient New Year became that of the passover, and among the Christians the season of the passover has become that of Easter.

In olden times the fires were always quenched in all the churches on Easter eve and kindled anew from the flint, and the new fire being hallowed by the priest every one could take home a brand, to be lighted, when needed, as a preservative against tempests. Less well observed is an old custom of putting the house in order on Easter day, particularly the kitchen.

In many parts of Ireland and England in olden days the belief obtained that on Easter morning the sun danced in honor of the resurrection. On the evening of Holy Saturday great preparations were made for the finishing of Lent. Many a fat hen and dainty piece of bacon were put in the pot by the cotter's wife, and woe to the person who should taste it before the stroke of 12, but at that hour would be heard the clapping of hands and cries of "Out with the Lent!" All would be feasting and merriment for a few hours, when the good people would retire, to rise about 4 o'clock in order to see the sun dance.

It was an old custom in England to break the Lenten fast by eating a gammon of bacon on Easter Sunday, and thus show the abhorrence in which the Jews were held on that festival day.

A custom obtained in many parts of England in which, as soon as the service of the church was over, the boys ran about and laid hold of every woman or girl they could meet on the street and accosted them with "Pay for your shoes, if you please," at the same time stooping to take them off, which, if they were not paid, they would do and would carry the shoes off, leaving the hapless female in her stocking feet.

At Twickenham two great cakes used to be divided in the church on Easter day among the young people, while in the Peak of Derbyshire a custom known as sugar cupping obtained. The children used to repair on Easter morning to a spring called the "Dropping Tor," with a cup in one hand, a quarter of a pound of sugar in the other, and having caught in their cups as much water as was desired from the dropping of the spring they dissolved the sugar in it and drank it.

It is the custom of German families on Easter eve to place sugar and real eggs, the former filled with sugar plums, in a nest, then to conceal it with dried leaves in the garden, that the joyous children may hunt for them on Easter morning.

It is a superstition all over the world that one should wear new clothes on Easter day. Bad luck will follow if there is not at least one article which is new.

It was an article of faith with the devout of Normandy that with the earliest chimes of the church bells of Easter morn celestial visitants descended and at every house where there were little children left eggs for them as tokens of their visits. But satan, ever on the alert, sometimes adroitly slipped in an egg of ill omen.

Many of the old Easter customs have gone like the wassail bowl and yule log of Christmas, but colored eggs, like Santa Claus, have firm hold on the childish heart.

There is a pretty legend to account for their origin—that a bird sung a sorrowful lay over Christ's tomb, and as a reward for its devotion its eggs were ever after decorated.

Another story is that of an exiled lady who amused herself and children by decorating eggs with Easter mottoes. One bearing the words, "Hope In God," fell into the hands of a soldier, who, by chance, gave it to the captive husband and father. He recognized the handwriting, and at last the fragile train brought about the reunion of the family.

Symbolism of the Lily.

In the middle ages the white lily came to be considered by the church the especial emblem of heavenly purity. It was dedicated to the Virgin Mary. Its cup became the model of the consecrated silver chalice, and nearly 100 saints claimed it for their emblem. Painters often placed it in the Madonna's hands in their representations of that most fond and precious ideal of ancient art, and its use in the festival of the annunciation gave to it the name of annunciation lily. The stately dignity and chaste and inviolate purity of the flower made it especially appropriate. Transferred from earlier to the later religion, from pagan temple to convent, cloister, cathedral and church, it has gained in significance in the transition and preaches on Easter morning and at all other times a gospel of beauty and love free from all egotism, full of wholesome piety and charity and rich with eternal purity and hope.

New Gowns For Easter.

The women who adorn themselves with fine garments on Easter morning are but following the superstition of their faraway forefathers in Saxon England, for to wear old clothes on that day will bring sad crosses in lore. In Poor Robin the ancient custom responsible for this modern law of fashion is referred to thus:

At Easter let your clothes be new,
Or else be sure you will it rue.

Miss Prue.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Lesson For the Week Beginning April 14. Comment by Rev. Walter J. Bates.

Topic, The Second Trial.

SCRIPTURE READINGS.—Job ii, 1-13.

Many persons who remain patient and submissive under disappointment, loss and bereavement lose patience when touched with bodily disease. Job shows his firm reliance upon God and the depth of his piety when under severe physical suffering he makes no complaint. Many Christians seem to lose their hold on God as soon as sickness comes upon them. Yet the presence of the Master is oftentimes revealed in richer grace and fuller spiritual blessings to one while on a sick bed than when busy in active life.

Easter Joy.

The Lord is risen.
Sing, Easter heralds, sing!
He burst the rocky prison.
Wide let the triumph ring!
Tell how the graves are quaking,
The saints their fetters breaking.
Sing, heralds, Jesus lives!

Prayer For Power.

After pardon of sins then comes the need of prayer for power. "Without me," says Christ, "ye can do nothing." Whoever attempts in his own strength to do God's service soon learns his weakness and helplessness. But power is given for service by the Holy Spirit. Consciousness of need and earnest desire for its possession are requisite for its reception. Complete consecration will be followed by the complete indwelling and filling of the Spirit in power. But, once received, it must be used in service; otherwise it vanishes and leaves the soul in weakness and darkness, as before.

Forgotten Pledges.

Every person received into the Methodist Episcopal church has voluntarily pledged in the presence of God and the congregation "to give according to ability to the support of the gospel and the various benevolent enterprises of the church." Many persons do not contribute a cent a year to any of the church benevolences and give very little to the support of the local church. Such callousness or carelessness of soul in this respect indicates a low state of spiritual life until it is difficult to see where such are different from the ordinary sinner except in the matter of profession of piety.

The Sunday School Army.

The Methodist Episcopal church has more than 29,000 Sunday schools and 300,000 teachers and 2,500,000 scholars. What ability is here if properly trained to work for the Master! How easily the debt on the missionary treasury of $175,000 could be lifted if this grand army corps should hear the Easter battlecry and move forward! How many Leagues in the Sunday school could stimulate the zeal of others by a timely word in this direction. Let the children and young people pour their treasure into the treasury of the church, and the children of heathenism will be won to Jesus.

Read Your Bible.

Read it every day. Young Christians especially should never neglect this. If pressed for time, better take it from eating or sleeping than to omit to feed on the word of God. One can get along in the Christian life and grow in grace and in knowledge of God if he lacks many things, but there is no permanent growth of character where the Bible is neglected. Better pass the newspaper by rather than the Scriptures. Find some way to read, study and meditate upon this book, which contains the wisdom of the ages, the promises of God and the hope of salvation.

One Cent a Day.

That is a small sum, yet if we could secure that amount from all the members of the church it would give $10,000,000 per year to help bring in the kingdom of God. Can it not be done? Are any so poor they cannot do as much as that?

Perhaps the collecting of such sums could be conducted on the plan adopted in Bristol, England, which resulted in establishing the Methodist class system. The project is feasible. Shall we undertake it?

Brotherhood of St. Andrew.

This is the title of the young people's society of the Protestant Episcopal church. It began some years since in St. James' church, Chicago. During the past five years its progress has been rapid. It places great emphasis upon spiritual culture of young men. It also cultivates carefully church loyalty.

Missionary Day.

The general missionary committee have requested that presiding elders, pastors and Sunday school superintendents unite in an effort to secure the observance of Easter Sunday as Children's Missionary day, thus connecting the day of the Lord's resurrection with the conquest of the world.

The League and Easter.

The gladdest, grandest of all Christian festivals is Easter day. Everywhere the League should make special observance of the occasion. Deliverance from fear of death through the raising of Jesus Christ from the dead is cause for rejoicing. "He hath begotten us again unto a living hope."

Leagues of New England.

The chapters of the six New England conferences are distributed as follows: East Maine, 72; Maine, 79; New Hampshire, 79; Vermont, 84; New England, 205; New England Southern, 154. The total is 673.

In Madagascar.

The Christian Endeavor societies on that island number 91 and report a membership of 3,377.

The True Spirit.

A single church in Toledo supports 20 missionaries in the home and foreign fields.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic For the Week Beginning April 14. Comment by Rev. S. H. Doyle.

TOPIC.—Risen with Christ—from what?—Rom. vi, 1-12; 20-23. (An Easter meeting.)

The practical lessons from the resurrection of Christ are many and important. In this twelfth chapter of Romans Paul deals principally with the question of holiness, of sanctification, illustrating and enforcing the necessity of dying unto sin and living unto God, by the resurrection of Christ, who died unto sin and now ever more liveth unto God. The topical references emphasize two ideas—first, that with Christ we die unto sin, and, second, with him we live unto God.

1. With Christ we die unto sin. "In that he died, He died unto sin" (verse 10). Christ died unto sin. This may mean several things—that He died for the destruction of sin; that He died for its expiation or on account of sin. In any sense it means that Christ separated Himself, by His death, for the burden of man's sin, which He had willingly assumed. With Christ believers also die to sin, but in an entirely different sin. It is personal, indwelling sin to which they die, or from which they separate themselves. But Christ not only died to sin, but died to it once for all. By His death He threw off the burden of sin forever. So the Christian must die once for all to sin. There must be no return or no continuance in sin after we have once separated ourselves from it. It is true that the greater the sin the greater is the grace of God in forgiving it, and yet we are not to sin that grace may the more abound. It cannot be. It is self contradictory. Death and life are antagonistic, and therefore if we are dead to sin we cannot be alive to sin. To live in sin would be therefore an evidence that we have not died to sin with Christ.

2. With Christ we live unto God. "In that He liveth, He liveth unto God" (verse 10). Others who were raised from the grave arose to live as before, but Christ arose to live unto God, not, though, that He had not lived unto God before His death. In Him the believer also rises to live unto God. "Likewise reckon ye also yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God, through Jesus Christ our Lord" (verse 11). To die unto sin is only half the story. We must live unto God. We must not only put off the old man, but put on the new. We must not only cease to do evil, but learn to do well. Repentance includes a turning from sin and a turning to God. Sanctification includes a dying unto sin and a living unto God. We rise with Christ Jesus from sin that we may live with Him unto God. This is the object of the Christian's life, not to yield himself unto sin, but to yield himself entirely unto God. We are freed from sin and become the servants of God that we may have fruit unto holiness and the end everlasting life. "For the wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ."

Bible Readings.—Ps. xvii, 15; Isa. xxvi, 19; Math. xxii, 31, 32; Luke xx, 37, 38; Rom. vii, 4-6; viii, 11; I Cor. vi, 14; xv, 14-20; II Cor. xiii, 4; Gal. ii, 20; Eph. ii, 4-6; Phil. iii, 10-14; Col. ii, 12; iii, 1-4; I Thess. iv, 13, 14; II Tim. ii, 11, 12; I John iii, 2.

A Sweet Temper Makes a Clean Heart.

Losing the temper takes all the sweet, pure feeling out of life. You may get up in the morning with a clean heart, full of song, and start out as happy as a bird, and the moment you are crossed and you give way to your temper the clean feeling vanishes, and a load as heavy as lead is rolled upon the heart, and you go through the rest of the day feeling like a culprit. And any one who has experienced this feeling knows that it cannot be shaken off, but must be prayed off.—Presbyterian Banner.

Junior Committees.

In small Junior societies it has sometimes been found best not to divide the society into committees, but to appoint simply the chairmen of the usual committees, requesting each chairman to consider the entire society his committee for the accomplishment of the work ordinarily assigned to him. When the missionary committee, for example, would have work to do, the chairman of that committee calls a meeting of the entire society, and so with all the other committees.—Exchange.

Loyal to the Church.

The editor of The Lutheran Evangelist takes occasion, in a recent number, to praise in high terms the loyalty of his Endeavorers to the church to which he ministers. "A larger per cent of them," he says, "sustain the second service on the Lord's day and the mid-week service than of the older church members."

Christian Endeavor Gossip.

Since the state convention in October nearly 140 societies have joined the Pennsylvania union.

Kansas City local union is thinking of instituting noon prayer meetings in the business portion of the city.

Eight languages are regularly heard in the meetings of Chicago local societies — Welsh, Norwegian, Swedish, Dutch, German, Bohemian, Chinese and English.

One of the active members of the Presbyterian society of Union, S. C., a young lady, made the rather remarkable record during 1894 of attending every Sunday morning service, Sunday school service, church prayer meeting and meeting of her society held during the whole year.

Scranton is already pushing its claims for the Pennsylvania state convention of 1896.

Christian Endeavor societies contributed $7,137.56 to the board of foreign missions of the Presbyterian church between May 1, 1894, to Jan. 1, 1895.

Two hundred more Junior societies, and there will be 8,000 on the rolls.

WITHIN CLOISTERS.

Solemn Services of Holy Week Behind Convent Walls.

The world is very wide awake and noisy in the spring of Easter week. On the street the boys sell huge bouquets, crying their blooming wares with hoarse voices. In the shops the tired saleswomen work early and late. In the churches there are crowds of chattering people who make wreaths and talk in garrulous fashion. There are rooms where the gaslight burns far into the spring morning. That is where the weary dressmaker is hurrying her work.

The orchestras are rehearsing new music, the actresses are planning new dresses, the florists are haggling about the price of a rose, the choir leaders are nervous and anxious, the new clergymen are wondering if their Easter service will be a success, and there are still jealousy and heartache among the women over their Easter bonnets.

In the convent garden it is very quiet and different, says the San Francisco Examiner. The lilac tree near the wall is in bloom, and the little altar of the Blessed Virgin in the arbor is draped with the yellow sprays of the blossoming currant. There is no one in the garden except a bent little sister, with a sweet, worn face. She is watering a little bed of pansies, but inside the big brick convent there is a sound of many feet. The sewing class is just over, and the girls are filing out into the study hall to put away their workboxes—the big, cool, clean study hall, with its shining floor and very straight clean chairs.

As the girls enter they drop a deep courtesy to a tall figure robed in black, which sits upon the platform. Then each girl, after she puts away her box, walks quietly to one of the chairs. The tall nun at the desk shuts a little signal box she holds in her hand, there is a sudden rap, and all the girls are seated.

"Children," says the religieuse, "we are entering upon a season of great joy. Let us prepare ourselves. Tonight the retreat will begin."

She makes a pretty, gentle little address and urges every child to put away all worldly thoughts and make herself worthy to celebrate the glorious Easter. She calls them children, yet there are girls of 18 or 20 among the crowd. In a convent every one is a child.

The refectory is big and bare and set round with long tables. There is a reading desk in the middle, but no one reads tonight. The retreat has begun. Silent sisters enter noiselessly and pass the food to the silent girls. When the meal is done, there is a big dish of warm water passed. Each girl thrusts in her spoon, her knife and her fork and wipes them.

It is warm in the garden yet, and the girls go out there. They walk in little groups of three and five. A few of them walk alone. All of them are telling their beads, with a murmur as of humming bees. The big bell rings. It's time for evening prayers. There is a snap of the signal box; every one rises. Another snap; they form in line. Another snap; they turn and walk from the room, their footsteps echoing on the hard floors. At the door they turn and courtesy.

It is 7:30 o'clock—bedtime at the convent. There is a glimmer of light in the west yet, but the blinds are closely drawn. Upstairs in the dormitory there are rows and rows of white beds, hung with snowy curtains. In the middle of the room is a table with a slate on it. If any one wants a collar or a handkerchief, she writes upon the slate and signs her number. In the morning the article she asked for will be there, folded upon her neat pile of clothing.

In a few minutes the rustling behind the white curtains ceases. A velvet footed religieuse walks from bed to bed to see that all are quiet. Then her low voice sounds distinctly through the room:

"Sacred heart of Jesus, immaculate heart of Mary."

From behind the curtain comes the answer, "I give you my heart."

Up in the chapel the nuns are praying—praying that the coming retreat may be full of blessings to the "children of the Sacred Heart."

Before 6 o'clock the next morning there is a long line of veiled figures filing into the chapel. They are all plainly clad and dressed in black. Each one carries a prayer book and her beads. The candles on the altar twinkle bright, yet far away. The incense swingers swing their burden monotonously. The breath of the lilac comes in at the window, and the day is begun. There are services in the chapel many times that day.

On Good Friday morning the very small children are just a little frightened when they see the chapel. The golden draperies are gone from the altar, the flowers have vanished, and all the twinkling lights are gone. It is gloomy and grewsome in the chapel when the altar lights are gone.

In front of the altar a row of nuns kneel with their arms out like a cross. Some of the larger girls are allowed to kneel there, too, and many of them are sobbing. One of them stays so long that she is borne out fainting. To the younger children the gentle sisters tell the old, old story of the dreadful day when Christ was crucified. It is so quiet and so dark in the chapel and the face of the pictured Christ is so sad that the little ones are frightened.

When the evening prayers are said, the girlish voices pour in the gloomy grandeur of the "Stabat Mater."

Long after the lights in the dormitory are out the nuns kneel before the altar with outstretched arms, and the little children dream that night of tears.

The next day there are prayers and vespers again. The children hope. Their sins begin to seem less hopeless. In the evening there is confession.

Then comes the glad Easter morning. The girls put on snowy veils. The chapel is a blossom with flowers. There is a burst of ecstatic music.

"Kyrie Eleison—Christi Eleison."

The nuns' faces are alight with a glorious radiance. The lilac tree swings her purple and white branches like a censer.

Christ is risen.
He is risen indeed.

THE CHRONICLES OF MARTIN HEWITT

By ARTHUR MORRISON.

THE CASE OF THE MISSING HAND.

[Copyright, 1895, by Bacheller, Johnson and Bacheller.]

CHAPTER V.

I suppose I may have somehow betrayed my amazement and horror to my companion's sharp eyes, for, suddenly, I felt his hand tightly grip my arm just above the elbow. I turned and found his face close by mine and his finger raised warningly. Then I saw him produce his wrist-grip and make a motion with his palm towards his mouth, which I understood to be intended to remind me of the gag. We stepped forward.

The man turned his horrible cooking over and over above the crackling sticks, as though to smoke and dry it in every part. I saw Hewitt's hand reach out toward him, and in a flash we had pulled him back over his heels and I had driven the gag between his teeth as he opened his mouth. We seized his wrists in the cords at once, and I shall never forget the man's look of ghastly, frantic terror as he lay on the ground. When I knew more I understood the reason of this.

Hewitt took both wrist holds in one hand and drove the gag entirely into the man's mouth, so that he almost choked. A piece of sacking lay near the fire, and by Hewitt's request I dropped that awful hand from the wooden tongs upon it and rolled it up in a parcel—it was, no doubt, what the sacking had been brought for. Then we lifted the man to his feet and hurried him in the direction of the cart. The whole capture could not have occupied thirty seconds, and, as I stumbled over the rough field at the man's left elbow, I could only think of the thing as one thinks of a dream that one knows all the time is a dream.

But presently the man, who had been walking quietly, though gasping, sniffing and choking because of the tightly rolled handkerchief in his mouth—presently he made a sudden dive, thinking doubtless to get his wrists free by surprise. But Hewitt was alert, and gave his wrists a twist that made him roll his head with a dismal, stifled yell, and with the opening of his mouth, by some chance, the gag fell away. Immediately the man roared aloud for help.

"Quick," said Hewitt, "drag him along—they'll hear in the vans. Bring the hand!"

I seized the fallen handkerchief and crammed it over the man's mouth as well as I might, and together we made as much of a trot as we could, dragging the man between us, while Hewitt checked any reluctance on his part by a timely wrench of the wrist-holds. It was a hard two hundred and fifty yards to the lane, even for us—for the gypsy it must have been a bad minute and a half indeed. Once more as we went over the uneven ground he managed to get out a shout, and we thought we heard a distant reply from somewhere in the direction of the encampment. We pulled him over a stile in a tangle and dragged and pushed him through a small hedge gap in a heap. Here we were but twenty yards from the cart, and into that we flung him without wasting time or tenderness, to the intense consternation of the driver, who, I believe, very nearly set up a cry for help on his own account. Once in the cart, however, I seized the reins and the whip myself, and, leaving Hewitt to take care of the prisoner, put the turnout along toward Ratherby at as near two miles an hour as it could go. We made first for Mr. Hardwick's, but he, we found, was with my uncle, so we followed him. The arrest of the Fosters had been effected, we learned, not very long after we had left the wood, as they returned, by another route to Ranworth.

We brought our prisoner into the colonel's library, where he and Mr. Hardwick were sitting.

"I'm not quite sure what we can charge him with, unless it's anatomical robbery," Hewitt remarked, "but here's the criminal."

The man only looked down with a sullenly impenetrable countenance. Hewitt spoke to him once or twice, and at last he said, in a strange accent, something that sounded like "Kekin jinaavoy."

"Keck jin?" (not understand) asked Hewitt, in the loud clear tone one instinctively adopts in talking to a foreigner Keckeno jinny.

The man understood and shook his head, but not another word would he say or another question answer.

"He's a foreign gypsy," Hewitt explained, "just as I thought—a Wallachian, in fact. Theirs is an older and purer dialect than that of the English gypsies, and only some of the root words are alike. But I think we can make him explain to-morrow that the Fosters, at least, had nothing to do with, at any rate, cutting off Sneathy's hand. Here it is, I think," and he gingerly lifted the folds of sacking from the ghastly object as it lay on the table, and then covered it again.

"But what—what does it all mean?" Mr. Hardwick said, in bewildered astonishment. "Do you mean this man is an accomplice?"

"Not at all—the case was one of suicide, as I think you'll agree when I've explained. This man simply found the body hanging and stole the hand."

"But what in the world for?"

"For the Hand of Glory. Eh!" He turned to the gypsy and pointed to the hand on the table. "Yag-tarst (fire hand) eh?"

There was a quick gleam of intelligence in the man's eye, but he said nothing. As for myself, I was more than astounded. Could it be possible that the old superstition of the Hand of Glory remained alive in a practical shape at this day?

"You know the superstition, of course," Hewitt said. "It did exist in this country in the last century, when there were plenty of dead men hanging at cross roads, and so on. On the continent, in some places, it has survived later. Among the Wallachian gypsies it has always been a great article of belief, and the superstition is even said to be active still. The belief is that the right hand of a dead man, cut off and dried over the smoke of certain wood and herbs, and then provided with wicks at each finger made of the dead man's hair, becomes, when lighted at each wick (the wicks are greased, of course,) a charm whereby a thief may walk without hindrance where he pleases in a strange house, push open all doors and take what he likes. Nobody can stop him, for everybody the Hand of Glory approaches is made helpless, and can neither move nor speak. You may remember there was some talk of thieves' candles in connection with the horrible series of Whitechapel murders not long ago. That is only one form of the cult of the Hand of Glory."

"Yes," my uncle said, "I remember reading so. There is a story about it in the 'Ingoldsby Legends,' too, I believe,"

"There is—it is called 'The Hand of Glory,' in fact. You remember the spell: 'Open lock to the dead man's knock,' and so on. But I think you'd better have the constable up and get this man into safe quarters for the night. He should be searched, of course. I expect they will find on him the hair noticed to have been cut from Sneathy's head."

The village constable arrived with his iron handcuffs in substitution for those of cord which had so sorely vexed the wrists of our prisoner, and marched him away to the little lockup on the green.

Marvelous Results.

From a letter written by Rev. A. Gunderman, of Dismondale, Mich., we are permitted to make this extract: "I have no hesitation in recommending Dr. King's New Discovery, as the results were almost marvelous in the case of my wife. While I was pastor of the Baptist Church at Rives Junction she was brought down by pneumonia succeeding la grippe. Terrible paroxysms of coughing would last hours with little interruption and it seemed as if she could not survive them. A friend recommended Dr. King's New Discovery it was quick in its work and highly satisfactory in results. Sold by L. W. Randolph druggist. Regular size 50c and $1; our price 45c and 90c

THE DAILY PRESS

ESTABLISHED MAY 10, 1887. PLAINFIELD, N. J., FRIDAY, APRIL 12, 1895. TWO CENTS A COPY. $5 A YEAR.

TWO FRESH YOUNG MEN.

Wanted to Paint the Town Red, But Brought Up in Court.

John Daly of New Brunswick and Jas. Albaine of Metuchen came to Plainfield yesterday with the intention of painting the town red. By 5 in the afternoon they had drank enough to paint their noses. They had a horse and wagon, and started driving about town in a fast and reckless manner. At 5:30 they started down Park avenue, with Albaine holding the reins, and Daly piying the whip over the horse for all that he was worth. No attempt was made to guide the horse, and near Ninth street they narrowly escaped running into a little girl on a bicycle. The avenue was full of wagons and people, and it seemed a wonder that no one was run down by the fresh young men.

Prompted with the continual piying of the whip, the horse went tearing on, and as he reached Prospect avenue turned suddenly, with the result of toppling over the wagon. The occupants were thrown under the vehicle, and the horse became tangled up in the harness, so that he also was thrown.

Things were finally righted by the crowd who had gathered by this time. O. T. Waring, who had seen the affair, took the two drunken men to task for their reckless conduct and inhuman treatment of the horse. At this Albaine became very profane and abusive, and when it was suggested that they ought to be arrested, he wanted to fight. Finally Sergeant Kiely was sent for, and he placed the pair under arrest. They were taken to the station house, and the horse and remnants of the buggy were taken to Roberts's livery stable.

In the City Court this morning each was fined $10, or 40 days in jail.

Never before have Plainfield people had such a large and well selected stock of goods to select from as now can be found at this house, and prices were never before so low. Go in Saturday night, and see the crowd. It 's good as going to a fair. Don't fail to visit the grocery department; there is where you can save lots of money.

Easter and Anniversary.

An attractive Easter service has been arranged for Sunday afternoon at 3 in the First Baptist Church, when the Sunday-schools of that church and its missions, East Third Street and Mount Olive, will hold their Easter and anniversary exercises.

Appropriate vocal and instrumental music, an address by Mayor Alexander Gilbert, and a recitation by Miss Addie Parker Jackson, will be special features.

Miss Jackson will render Phillip Brooks's beautiful poem descriptive of the Resurrection, entitled "God's Garden on Easter Day". The schools extend a cordial invitation to the public to attend.

A., in respect to their success in filling applications for work.

LITTLE OPPOSITION.

Few Appear Against the Building Ordinance.

GRIEVANCE COMMITTEE APPOINTED.

A Lawyer, a Decorator and a Coal Dealer Chosen to Amend the Ordinance Which the Architects and Builders Have Drafted.

The meeting held in the Board of Trade rooms last night to discuss the provisions of the proposed new building ordinance was presided over by Frank W. Runyon, with Gus Smith as secretary. Between fifteen and twenty were present.

Mr. Runyon stated that some people were opposed to certain sections of the proposed ordinance and believed that they should be materially modified. Several had spoken to him concerning these things, and one of them was the portion of the ordinance which makes it necessary to build brick partitions in double houses outside the fire limits. Another section was the one which empowered the fire marshal or building inspector to prohibit the reconstruction of such a double house when more than fifty per cent. had been destroyed. Even if only fifty-five per cent. of the structure was injured the marshal could condemn the whole building and refuse to allow it to be repaired. In most cases of this sort hardships would ensue for the owner, because insurance companies would refuse to pay more than the damages to the part burned. These objections were not of his own, but were those that other persons had made to him and he offered them to the meeting simply as they had been made to him. He believed he violated no confidence when he stated that Corporation Counsel Marsh, who drew up the ordinance at the instruction of the committee, told him that if it went into effect it would be speckled with amendments before two years passed. Mr. Marsh formulated the document at the instructions and suggestions of the Councilmen, but this was his private opinion.

Secretary Smith read the third section of the ordinance from the correct publication in The Daily Press, as embodying some of the objectionable portions, at the suggestion of several present. An objection raised was the absolute power invested in the fire marshal in passing on plans submitted. It was said that it does not give the marshal any stated time within which to decide either one way or the other, and should he by any chance be a man of mercenary motives a great deal of trouble could be occasioned a property owner by holding his approval in abeyance.

Another objection raised was the one exploited in The Daily Press of last Monday by a correspondent—that of filing plans and paying fees even for the most minor of repairs. L. B. Woolston thought that such a condition would make it extremely hard on the individual of limited means. In fact, he said, the ordinance seemed to have been drafted in favor of providing plenty of work for architects. Of course this was not the intention of the councilmen, but results which it would attain in that direction were apparent.

Chairman Runyon said that he had understood the Council committee had endeavored to give all who were particularly interested in the ordinance a hearing before it was presented in an official form. However, he thought that some portions of it was too hard on the common people, by imposing restrictions that were unnecessary in a town the size of Plainfield. There was no question in his mind but what a building inspector was a needed official, but the ordinance was going too far in many respects.

J. B. Coward thought that section five in reference to cellars was very unfair, by reason of compelling a foundation of a certain size to be built for all structures, when in the majority of cases it would be totally unnecessary. The foundation, he considered, should be built somewhat in proportion to the structure it was to support, but the ordinance made it mandatory for a builder to have a cellar wall heavy enough to hold a large building, even though he was only to construct a small frame.

John D. Runyon said that a great many carpenters had called his attention to certain portions of the proposed ordinance as imposing provisions to be complied with on the part of the builder that seemed unnecessarily stringent. But carpenters as a rule, he said, were averse to making such statements in public, because they think that many would construe their utterances as being opposed to the ordinance so as to be able to put up cheaper buildings. But such was not the case.

Oscar S. Teale, the architect, stated that a very important thing was the building inspector which the ordinance would create on its adoption. It makes no qualifications for holding the office, except that the incumbent shall be a mechanic. A shoemaker was classed as a mechanic and under the provisions of the code he could be appointed to the position. Such a thing of course was not intended, but the loophole was there to be taken advantage of some day if the appointing powers should feel so disposed. Every change and improvement must be approved by the inspector, and the incongruity of having a shoemaker or blacksmith passing on the plans of an architect who has spent years of study and experience in the business, was plainly apparent. He did not want to appear egotistical, but it seemed to cast a sad reflection on the ability of an architect. He did not believe that one man should have all the power to pass on plans and alterations. It was in conflict with the methods of most other cities. There were many things in the ordinance that were needed, but there was plenty else that should be modified. As a whole the ordinance was 50 years ahead of Plainfield.

J. D. Runyon was in a quandary as to just what the effect of section six would be—that part that refers to an approved fire cut-off at each floor.

Mr. Teale replied that that was one of the admirable sections of the ordinance. The effect was to make a slow burning building.

The discussion was finally closed, and a motion made that the chairman appoint a committee to frame objections to the undesirable portions of the ordinance, and report at an adjourned meeting next Thursday evening in the Board of Trade rooms. The chair appointed J. B. Coward, L. B. Woolston, and J. D Runyon.

In all probability at the next meeting a committee will be appointed to present such objections as may be made to the Council, and petition them to defer its adoption until a public hearing can be had.

The committee appointed last night will confer with architects and builders during the week to seek out the objectionable features.

A Two-Days Tournament.

The gymnastic contest which will take place in the Y. M. C. A. gymnasium April 29 and 30, has already caused considerable enthusiasm, and the event gives promise of being very successful. There will be four gold, six silver and six bronze medals, to the value of $50, offered as prizes. A large number of entries has already been received. Director MacPhie has secured the services of Physical Director Black of Rahway to act as one of the judges.

Held For the Grand Jury.

John Brennan was arraigned before Justice Nash this morning on the charge of stealing manure from S. A. Cruikshank of Belvidere avenue. Chief Grant received a telephone message at 7:30 last night stating that someone was stealing manure from the corner of Watchung and Woodlawn avenues. He hurried to the place and captured Brennan, who was there loading it on to a wagon. He was held in $50 bail for action of the grand jury.

Lost a Finger.

While coupling cars in the Central yard just above the North Avenue station, yesterday at 2:30, Thomas Pendergrast, conductor of the Elizabeth drill engine, had the second finger on the left hand cut off. He returned to his home in Elizabeth on the 3:12 train, where he entered the hospital.

Invented a Fender.

A. W. Heyzer, formerly a resident of this city, has invented a fender for trolley cars, and patented the same. It is considered by the best experts of New York city the best up to date, being automatic in its action, and independent of the motorman.

Those who never read the advertisements in their newspapers miss more than they presume. Jonathan Kenison, of Bolan, Worth Co., who had been troubled with rheumatism in his back, arms and shoulders, read an item in his paper about how a prominent German citizen of Fort Madison had been cured. He procured the same medicine, and to use his own words: "It cured me right up." He also says: A neighbor and his wife were both sick in bed with rheumatism. Their boy was over to my house and said they were so bad that he had to do the cooking. I told him of Chamberlain's Pain Balm and how it had cured me, he procured a bottle of it and it cured them up in a week. 50 cent bottles for sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy, Park and North aves. T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

OBITUARY.

Frederick Knowland.

Frederick Knowland died last night at his Plainfield home, 143 East Seventh street. He was seized with a hemorrhage two months ago, and made a six-weeks trip South, and on coming home was somewhat improved. But more serious conditions devoloped, and in spite of medical skill and good nursing he sank steadily.

Mr. Knowland began life in Pittsburg, and among his early companions were Mr. Stewart, superintendent of the freight department of the Pennsylvania Railroad, and Mr. McCullough, Vice-president of the P. R. R. To use Mr. Knowland's phrase, "they were barefooted boys together". Later he worked as a freight-handler on a Mississippi steamboat, and still later he spent several years on the Western plains endeavoring to build up a robust constitution. He there met with many thrilling adventures which he used to enjoy relating to his friends.

By hard work and through his own abilities he became general freight agent of the Consolidated Union Central and Pacific railroad, and had entire charge of the system of roads, in the freight department, under Jay Gould's administration. He was Jay Gould's right-hand man in this respect, and enjoyed his confidence fully. It is said that when Mr. Knowland would begin talking and bring the first two fingers of his right hand at almost a right angle, closing the others, that Mr. Gould quietly folded his arms and approved of everything he said. During the war Mr. Knowland is said to have had charge of the transportation of more troops than any other man who occupied a similar position. He did the work for the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, and received great credit for his executive ability.

Mr. Knowland was wont to spend his vacations on his farm on the Allegheny river near Pittsburg. A tributary of the Allegheny runs through Mr. Knowland's farm, and fine sport is enjoyed in fishing. Mr. Knowland used to say that were it not for this recreation and diversion afforded him by visiting his farm he could hardly stand the heavy strain of hard work devolving upon him. "When I returned to my office yesterday after two or three days absence" said he, after a recent vacation, "I found a stack of letters as thick as your body awaiting me. Work hard? Why, I am compelled to work hard—I can't help it."

He was a generous-hearted man, and many discovered this good quality beneath his business-like demeanor, much to their own satisfaction and personal comfort. His own life had been an adventurous one and he took pleasure in giving others the advantage of his experience.

He was an active Republican, and for one term a Plainfield Councilman. He leaves a wife and two married daughters.

Mr. Knowland was a warm comrade on fishing expeditions of the late Senator Robert Livingston and Banker Alex. Taylor of New York.

IN THE PASTOR'S NEW HOME.

Trinity Church People and Their Friends Enjoy Another Tea.

The beautiful new West Front street home of Rev. Cornelius Schenck, pastor of Trinity Reformed Church, was thrown open to the congregation and friends last evening, for the holding of another of the famous teas of the Ladies Christian Work Society. Pastor Schenck's home is an ornament to West End Park, and the party inspecting it last night were greatly pleased, and congratulated and complimented him and his wife.

The attendance was large, and the sociability that prevailed was characteristic of the circle which has enjoyed the teas of the Christian Work Society in the past. Street Commissioner Robert A. Meeker smiled on everyone passing in at the door, and took care of the deposits left for the Sunday-school renovation fund. The efficient committee in charge consisted of Mrs E T VanWinkle, chairman, Mrs F A Church, Mrs P M Demarest, Mrs J F MacDonald, and Mrs R A Meeker. At the table, Mrs P M Demarest presided, and poured coffee. The waitresses were Mrs F E Woodruff and Mrs J A Love. The refreshments were substantial and excellent, and all were delighted with the event. Not only did all have a splendid time, but in addition nearly $22 was raised for the cause.

—In his search for bargains yesterday Mr. Doane ran across a manufacturer who had several thousand cases of black and tan oxfords, such as are retailed from $1.25 to $1.50. Doane & Edsall will put them on sale at once, and sell them for 74 cents a pair as long as they last. Their ad today tells of other Easter bargains.

PATRIOTS RECEPTION.

W. C. T. U. Display Their Hospitality.

VETERANS HEARTILY ENTERTAINED.

Their Wives and Sons Also Regaled with Good Things at Rooms of the Prohibition Workers—Spirit of the Boys in Blue Prevails.

A most enjoyable reception was arranged and given by the W. C. T. U. last evening in their rooms to Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R., Major Anderson Post, No. 109, G. A. R., Woman's Relief Corps No. 10, and John Hand Camp, No. 28, S. of V. The above organizations met at the rooms of Post 73, and were escorted to the Union's rooms to the beat of the drum. When they entered the room the women gave the Chautauqua salute by request.

Miss Carra Peck, president of the Union, presided and announced the several numbers on the programme. Mrs Honeyman then sang "The Boys in Blue" which was well rendered and heartily received. Miss Jennie Crosley was the accompanist.

This was followed with the reading of the fifty-sixth Psalm by the president, and Rev. C. E. Herring offered prayer.

Miss Peck then gave an address of welcome and her words were well spoken, for everyone felt that they were thrice welcome. She spoke of the past year, and how many that were present at the last reception had been called to their final home. Her remarks were exceedingly appropriate and much enjoyed.

The audience then joined heartily in the singing of "America".

Miss Peck introduced Rev. C. E. Herring who made the address of the evening. He said that he felt as though he had been through the Battle of the Wilderness, for something had seized him, and he did not know what it was. He was evidently suffering with a severe cold. He liked the soldiers, for they had accomplished so much for this country in preserving the flag. The speaker thought that there should be more patriotism, for it was divine.

This country, he said, was God's country, and it was one of great opportunity. The right would prevail in the end, though everything seemed to be against us.

Several circumstances in relation to the late war were brought to mind, and it stirred the hearts of the veterans when he told of the courage of Grant when that great chief said that "he would fight it out on that line if it took all Summer" when he was found fault with. And it proved to be the right time, for Lee was forced to make an unconditional surrender. Mr. Herring's remarks were impressive and everyone present thoroughly enjoyed them, and at the close hearty applause was given.

Mrs. Honeyman again pleased those present by singing "The Sword of Bunker Hill", after which Miss Arnold gave a recitation that thrilled the hearts of all with patriotism and love for country. The Martin Bros. Quartette then sang in their own happy style "Come Away" with guitar accompaniment. They were encored and rendered another selection.

Miss Florence Dodge dressed as an old woman gave a recitation that was exceedingly amusing entitled "How have we spent the Winter months". It caused a great deal of laughter, for the impersonation was finely given. After a selection by the quartette all united in singing "God be with you".

It was then announced that a collation had been prepared and all were invited to remain and partake. Sandwiches, coffee and beans was the menu and it was an excellent one. Miss Peck then stated that the balance of the evening would be given to the veterans.

Commander Coriell thanked her on behalf of those present and asked Comrade Mattox to give a recitation and the boys gave him a cordial reception. H. S Thatcher was also called on and pleased all with two well-rendered selections. Miss Cum also gave a recitation that was meritorious. The singing of "America" brought to a close an evening of real pleasure.

The affair was in charge of Mrs. M. C. Dobbins, superintendent of the soldiers, sailors and firemen's work, assisted by Mrs. Winters, Mrs. Blair, Mrs. Honeyman and Miss Peck. Much credit is due them for their earnest efforts to afford a pleasant time for all.

—The North Plainfield Borough Council will meet this evening in adjourned session to act on matters of importance.

Daughters of Rebekah.

The Daughters of Rebekah, Friendship Lodge, No. 4, held their first meeting last night in Odd Fellow's Hall, Babcock Building. There was a good attendance of members and visitors, among which were many Past Grands, Chapter Masons, who are members of the Order of Rebekah, come to welcome the ladies to their new quarters.

During the evening there were nine members initated, one balloted for and one application. The district deputy expressed a great deal of pleasure at the rapid growth of the Lodge, also the able and beautiful manner in which the work was done as they received the regalia from the local officer. He also said that he had visited many lodges, but Plainfield appeared fast going ahead. Address and music were also enjoyed, after which all present were invited by the Noble Grand to the banquet hall where a tempting lunch was partaken of by so many that sitting room was scarce, notwithstanding the hall is much larger than the one formerly occupied by them. After several speeches given by the Noble Grand, Vice Grand and members concerning the elegance and comfort of the rooms, they all parted for home very much pleased with the evening's enjoyment.

The next sociable will be held at the home of Sister B. Higgins, 680 West Front street, Thursday evening, April 18.

SHOT BY A SENATOR

Kentucky Cashier Killed by a Business Rival.

John L. Sandford, the Murdered Man, Drew His Revolver and Shot First, the Ball Passing Through Senator Goebel's Trousers—The News at Washington.

Covington, Ky., April 12.—Senator Goebel shot and instantly killed John L. Sandford, cashier of the Farmers and Traders' bank of this city, yesterday afternoon. They were business enemies. Senator Goebel, accompanied by Attorney General Hendrick, of Kentucky, and Frank Helm, president of the First National bank, was en route to the bank. When they reached the door there stood Sandford. He shook hands with Hendricks, using his left hand. Then he asked Goebel if he wrote an article attacking him. Goebel answered "I did."

Sandford Fired First.

Immediately Sandford fired, the ball passing through Goebel's trousers. Quick as a flash Goebel leveled his revolver and fired. To do so he had to place the pistol beneath Helm's chin. The ball crashed through Sandford's forehead and he fell in the doorway of the bank, blood oozing from his fatal wound. Helm's chin was badly powder burned. Great commotion prevailed instantly, the street and bank being well crowded at the time. During the confusion Senator Goebel walked to the station house and called up his brother, Justus, who is a member of the firm of Lowry & Goebel, of Cincinnati, asking him to come to Covington at once, as he was in trouble.

Gave Himself Up.

Senator Goebel then emerged from the telephone box and addressing the lieutenant in charge, said: "I wish to surrender myself. I have shot and killed John Sandford." Chief Goodson placed Goebel under arrest, but allowed him to sit in his private office. Senator Goebel was calm at first, but later became visibly excited. At first he refused to discuss the affair, but under the excitement he finally gave his version of it.

The Senator's Story.

"Here is the reason I killed him," exclaimed the senator, as he showed where the ball of Sanford's pistol had passed through his trousers, tearing away a portion of the cloth: "He was lying in wait for me," continued the senator. "I saw him when I reached the gas office, twenty feet away from the steps of the First National bank, with my friend Hendricks. As soon I saw him reach for his revolver, I reached for mine." President Helm and General Hendricks give very similar versions of the tragedy.

Kentucky Colony Shocked.

Secretary Carlisle, who was a personal friend of both men, received a private telegram late in the afternoon announcing the fact. It is stated here by intimate friends of both men that the origin of the present trouble was purely business antagonism, which eventually made them factional enemies.

STATUS OF ELECTRIC ROADS.

A Decision of the Connecticut Legislative Committee Upon the Subject.

Hartford, April 12.—Electric street railroad interests have just received an unexpected setback in the ruling by the railroad committee of the legislature. There was a hearing on an application for a charter to build an electric line from New Haven to Derby, and it was represented by the projectors that it would be built almost wholly over private lands purchased by the company. Counsel for the Consolidated road promptly raised the objection that if this was the case the road would not be a street railroad coming under the street railroad law of 1893, but must be regarded as a steam railroad enterprise, subject to the general railroad law of the state. Therefore, it would be required, as a condition precedent to the hearing of its application, that the engineers' maps of the layout and specifications as to cost, etc., be filed. The committee went into executive session, and announced later that this must be regarded as practically a steam road and subject to the restrictions prescribed by the general railroad law as to maps, etc.

D. 1066. Assistant District Attorney John F. McIntyre, who will try the case, probably next week, says that William F. Howe, who will defend Caesar, will demand that the statements made be proved. When they were sold out, one-half of the profits went to Sanders. It is said that at the time of his death between fifty and seventy-five men were working for him in this way.

THE ESCAPE OF PERRY

Did He Have Assistance from the Inside?

Cell Doors Left Unlocked Through Carelessness or Intentionally—Superintendent Allison Has a Theory, But Will Say Nothing at Present. Searching for the Fugitives.

Poughkeepsie, N. Y., April 12.—There are no further developements in the escape of train robber Perry. The sixteen attendants who were sent out early yesterday morning in search of the fugitives started out again this morning. Keeper Carmody, who was assaulted by the escaped prisoners, has been suspended temporarily, pending an investigation by State Superintendent Lathrop, which will be made to-morrow.

The Superintendent Has a Theory.

Superintendent Allison has theories of the matter, but he is unwilling to express them before the investigation for fear of casting suspicion on those who may be innocent. The attendants in charge of the ward say that each man was locked up in his room. Supt. Allison is at loss to understand how the men escaped from their rooms without the locks being broken, unless they had assistance. The most likely thing is that one or all of the doors were left open by the attendants, either intentionally or through negligence.

The Escape.

The escape occurred shortly after 11 o'clock when Night Watchman Carmody, who has been connected with the asylum for years, was making his rounds. Carmody passed from the main building into the annex. He turned to go to one end of the corridor, when McGuire and Quigley, who had stolen from their cells while Perry was talking to Carmody, sprang upon him, throwing him to the floor. Perry rushed from his cell and helped to bind and gag Carmody.

Perry Saved the Keeper's Life.

When they had finished Carmody was carried into Perry's cell and tied to the bed. According to Carmody's story, McGuire suggested that they murder the keeper, but Perry, who assumed the leadership, said: "No, we shall not. Let him live." They took Carmody's keys and unlocked the cells of their companions, O'Donnell and Davis. These two cells were not unlocked when Carmody entered the building. The five men then stole cautiously to the door leading to the chapel and, climbing on a scaffolding left by painters, broke through the skylight and from the roof scaled the water pipes to the ground. Before the last man had left the roof the alarm was given, but in the darkness all escaped.

Extra Precautions Taken.

Superintendent Allison says that on account of the desperate reputation of the five men who escaped extra precaution was taken at the asylum to prevent an attack on the keepers and an effort at escape.

MEAT MAY BECOME A LUXURY.

Advance in Prices Probably Caused by a Decreasing Supply.

Washington, April 12.—The recent increase in the price of beef has suggested to Secretary Morton the startling possibility that this country has reached the limit of its cattle raising capacity, and that with the increase of population the price will continue to advance until beef becomes, as in Europe, not a staple article of food for the working people but only an occasional luxury. He has begun an inquiry into the matter to discover if possible whether the above is the real cause or a trust exists to force up prices.

Small Decreasing.

Concerning the inquiry Secretary Morton said: "It would appear that the primary cause of the increased price is that the supply is decreasing, while the demand is constant or increasing. In Texas there are not ten cattle to-day to hundreds a short time ago. And the four points, so-called—Chicago, Kansas City, St. Louis and Omaha—where cattle are slaughtered, are falling off in their supply of the market."

Armour Says Short Corn Crop.

Chicago, April 12.—C. M. Favorite, representing Armour & Co., said that the rumor of a cattle combine was without foundation, and that the present advance was due to a scarcity of supply caused by a short corn crop.

A GREAT AGREEMENT.

25,000 Physicians of One Mind.

Food for Strength First.—Medicine for Cure Second.—The Least Food that will give Most Nourishment, the Kind.

In this enlightened age, the old theory held by physicians—to get as much medicine in the least possible time into the system of a patient, even at the expense of stomach, blood, brains, nerves, and often, in the end, life itself—has been abandoned.

The old way was to "dose." If the patient had a tremendous constitution, he sometimes "pulled through;" if not, which was more often the case, that special disease was considered more dangerous, as it had claimed another for its own.

But this is all changed now. All prominent physicians agree on one subject, anyway. It is this—build the patient up first, give him new blood and strength, add flesh to his bones. He's then ready to receive the benefit of proper medical treatment.

To do this effectually, that must be given which will, in the least quantity, produce the greatest amount of vitality,—not a stimulant which quickly reacts disastrously, but a genuine food, a muscle, bone, and blood maker. Such a food was long sought for, and at last discovered in that original and only raw food extract—Bovinine.

By the use of this wonderful life-generating preparation, every organ of the body becoming strengthened by nourishment, naturally begins to perform its ordinary functions, and at once the patient is on the road to recovery.

It is this result, obtained in hundreds of cases where Bovinine has been used, that has caused its indorsement by 25,000 prominent physicians in America.

In addition, thousands who have been benefited can vouch for the wonderful results obtained by the use of Bovinine, for invalids, the old, convalescents, the over-worked, or, in fact, all who have found it necessary to maintain strength, flesh, and vigor.

WHAT JAPAN DEMANDS

Authoritative Statement of the Terms Submitted.

Five Concessions Demanded—Three Hundred Million Taels, Permanent Occupation of Port Arthur and the Contiguous Territory, Cession of Formosa and a New Treaty.

Washington, April 12.—An authoritative statement of the terms of peace being negotiated between Japan and China has been secured from official sources. The statement is made in order to clear up much misapprehension arising from speculation as to the terms of peace.

What Japan Demands.

They are five in number, as follows: Independence of Corea, permanent cession of the island of Formosa to Japan, indemnity of 300,000,000 taels (Chinese coin worth $1.33), permanent occupation by Japan of Port Arthur and the immediate contiguous territory, a new Japan-China treaty opening the interior of China to commerce.

The Money Demanded.

The money indemnity is expressed in Chinese taels instead of Japanese yen. The tael is in reality a weight instead of a coin. It is considered silver money. While the face value at $1.33 would be equivalent to $399,000,000, in silver it is said the actual value would be between $210,000,000 and $200,000,000 in gold.

Trade Features.

The fifth term, as a new treaty, to includes various trade features, such as free access of Chinese rivers. There is no demand for territory on the main land outside of Port Arthur and its contiguous surroundings.

Russian Press Comment.

St. Petersburg, April 12.—The Novoe Vremya says that if Great Britain has approved the territorial demands of Japan in regard to Manchuria and Corea, Russia will consider herself relieved of the obligations of common action and will oppose Japan on land and sea.

PRESENT FROM KING OF SIAM.

Books Received at Harvard That Even the Professors Cannot Read.

Boston, April 12.—The king of Siam has just presented to the Harvard library thirty-nine volumes of a Siamese book—the "Tripitaka," or sacred books of the Southern Buddhists. They are printed in coarse Siamese type, and the characters are quite indescribable. An occasional water wheel is thrown in, and the general effect of the page as printed is to cause the reader to gasp. The paragraphs are indented at the right hand margin of the page, and the lines read from side to side instead or in a vertical column, as in the case with Chinese and Japanese. There is not a professor in Harvard that can read these strange books.

ACTRESS ADJUDGED INSANE.

Grace Vaughn, of the Isle of Champagne, Committed.

Chicago, April 12.—Mrs. Grace Jennings, the actress, whose stage name is Grace Vaughn, formerly a member of the Thomas Q. Seabrooke Isle of Champagne company, was adjudged insane yesterday and committed to Elgin. She recently pawned $1,000 worth of jewelry for $55 and ordered $1,000 worth of fine furniture sent to her house. She has been in an asylum before.

FRENCH LAUNCH STOPPED.

Alleged Outrage by the British Royal Niger Company.

Paris, April 12.—The Temps announces that, contrary to the treaty stipulation respecting the free navigation of the Niger, the Royal Niger company recently stopped a steam launch belonging to a French warship, which was ascending the lower Niger.

Incapacitated from Duty.

Washington, April 12.—First Lieutenant Albert J. Russell, 7th cavalry, has been found incapacited for active service, by reason of physical disabilities contracted in the lines of duty, and has been ordered to his home, to await retirement. He was born in Connecticut, from which state he was appointed to the military academy in 1872.

School Boy Fatally Shot.

Wilkesbarre, Pa., April 12.—Elmer Metz, aged 15 years, was shot through the head yesterday at Ashley and will die. He and two school mates, Charles Hardgraver and Harry Young had been playing with a revolver near their school house during recess. In some unaccountable manner the weapon exploded.

Valuable Horse Killed.

Rochester, N. H., April 12.—The well known trotter Forest Patchen, owned by J. T. Duntley of this city, broke a foreward leg yesterday and was despatched. In 1882 and 1883 this horse was the fastest in New Hampshire with a record of 2:19¼ and was valued at $10,000.

Peaceful Conditions in Argentina.

London, April 12.—The minister for foreign affairs of the Argentine Republic has sent a dispatch from Buenos Ayres to the Argentine minister at London saying that the relations between the Argentine Republic and Chili are still friendly.

Lee Murder Trial.

New Haven, Conn., April 12.—State Attorney Doolittle announced yesterday that he expected to try the murder case against Dr. J. Edward Lee on Tuesday next. Dr. Lee's counsel says this is in every way acceptable to them.

Wages Restored.

Providence, R. I., April 12.—The United States Cotton company of Central Falls has announced an advance to old rates April 22. This is an increase of 10 per cent. and affects 750 hands.

Death of Frederick W. Knowland.

Plainfield, N. J., April 12.—Frederick W. Knowland, general freight manager of the Central Pacific railroad, died here last night from pneumonia. He was 50 years of age.

Shoe Strike at Newburyport.

Newburyport, Mass., April 12.—There is a strike at the Newburyport shoe factory for an increase in wages. The strike may be a serious one.

BAIL REFUSED MRS. MACK.

No More Arrests in the Stamp Swindling Case.

Hamilton, Ont., April 12.—No more arrests have been made in connection with the counterfeit United States stamp swindlers. Mrs. Mack engaged John W. Nesbitt, queen's counsel, a prominent criminal lawyer, as her counsel, and when the latter requested bail for his client the magistrate absolutely declined to consider the matter. The officers believe that Mrs. Mack comes from Chicago and that she is connected with a gang of crooks who have their headquarters in that city. The officers feel confident that they can very soon lay their hands on George Morrison who conducted the Canadian end of the game. Anthony Koch, proprietor of the Queen's hotel where Mrs. Mack boarded, states that on the day Mrs. Mack arrived from New Yark, she and Morrison had a lengthy conversation in a private room and during the conversation they ordered liquors sent into them and drank together.

WORSE THAN THE ORIGINAL.

So Says the President in Regard to Dr. Lansing's Apology.

Boston, April 12.—As an outcome of the apology made by Dr. Lansing in the Cleveland episode, a Boston citizen felt that some fellow townsman ought to call upon Dr. Lansing and demand an apology for the apology made by the reverend gentleman. With this end in view an offer to demand such an apology and proper reparation was forwarded to the president. The following reply was received:

Washington, April 12.—While his so-called retraction is an aggravation of his original offense, I am willing that his further punishment should be left to his conscience and the contempt of his neighbors and the American people.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

WARSHIPS FOR NICARAGUA.

Rumors That the Olympia and Monterey Are Bound for Corinto.

San Francisco, April 12.—It is rumored here that the cruiser Olympia, instead of going to Santa Barbara to attend the flower festival, is under orders to proceed to Corinto, Nicaragua. Report also has it that the Monterey is bound for the same place, and that when the British war vessels arrive at Corinto to collect England's bill against Nicaragua they will find two American men-of-war in the harbor. The Olympia arrived at Santa Barbara yesterday and according to a dispatch from that town will go to Santa Cruz island for target practice and drill. The Monterey is at present at San Diego.

RECALCITRANT WITNESSES.

Efforts To Bring the Sugar Cases to Trial at an Early Day.

Washington, April 12.—District Attorney Birney is trying to make arrangements for the trial two weeks hence of the recalcitrant witnesses in the sugar trust investigation. The attorneys in all the cases have been urging speedy action also. There are several cases that will have to be disposed of before the sugar cases can be taken up. It is expected that Mr. Birney will be assisted in the trials by some one from the office of the attorney general, probably Mr. Whitney.

ANGRY AT THE AMERICAN PRESS

Madrid Epoca Doesn't Like Its Criticisms of Spain.

Madrid, April 15.—The Epoca makes a violent attack on the American press, which it says admires nothing but the "almighty dollar." Spaniards, it adds, cannot expect better treatment than the leading American politicians, who suffer unheeded insults so gross that they would cause duels and lawsuits in other countries. The paper advises Spaniards to despise a press that sympathizes with filibusters, doubtless from interested motives.

Abandoned Vessel Found at Sea.

Havre, April 12.—The captain of the steamship Merrimac from New Orleans reports that on the 4th he put his chief officer and ten men aboard the British ship Arno, which had been abandoned at sea. They will take the vessel to Liverpool, he says. The Arno's crew were taken off in a storm by the German steamship Normannia.

Clergymen Barred Out.

Philadelphia, April 12.—The Union League club has revoked the privilege, for twenty-two years allowed, giving clergymen the same footing as members, the reason assigned being the "meddlesome" interference of the clergymen of Philadelphia in the last mayoralty campaign.

Wilde Remanded for a Week.

London, April 12.—Oscar Wilde and his fellow prisoner, Taylor, were up in the Bow street police court yesterday and their case was put over for a week. Bail was refused. Wilde looked haggard and careworn.

More Students To Call on Bismarck.

Vienna, April 12.—A deputation of fifty students and municipal councillors left Graz last night for Hamburg. They will go to Friedrichsruhe on Sunday and will be received by Prince Bismarck.

The Perry Arrives at Acapulco.

Washington, April 12.—The revenue marine cutter Perry, en route from New York to San Francisco, arrived at Acapulco yesterday on the western coast of Mexico.

OIL GOES SKYWARD

Fourth Day of the Advance in Petroleum.

Highest Price Since 1877 Reached, Producers and Not the Speculators Reaping the Harvest—Unparalleled Activity in the Oil Fields Predicted for the Balance of This Month.

Oil City, Pa., April 12.—The fourth consecutive day of the phenomenal advance in the price of petrolem oil was passed yesterday, and the boom in oil markets this week stands without a parallel since 1876. The first quotation on the certificate oil market yesterday was $1.50½, and the first sale was at $1.60½, an advance of 10 cents over the previous day's closing price. The market broke to $1.50 at 10.30 a. m.; then advanced to $1.63½ at 11.15 a. m., and to $1.80 at 12.45 p. m., the highest price since December 20, 1877, when $1.81¼ was touched.

Fluctuated Wildly.

About 1.30 selling orders came in from Bradford and other places by parties who have been carrying certificates since the market left 60a70 cents, and the price declined quickly from $1.80 to $1.69, reacting to $1.73 soon after 2 p. m. It fluctuated wildly during the last hour, reaching $1.75 bid at 2.30 p. m., declining to $1.68 near 3 p. m. and closing at $1.69 bid.

Producers Reaping the Benefit.

An advance of 50 points per gallon on refined oil was quoted from New York city at noon, which was the cause of advance in May option oil to $1.80. Refined oil in barrels is quoted at 8 1-2 per gallon and 6 per gallon in bulk. Producers and not speculators are reaping the benefit of this advance in oil. Prior to 1890 the oil exchanges were the curse of the oil producers.

Banking the Cash Now.

In 1882-3, the last big advance in prices, the oil country went mad over gambling on the exchanges. Oil producers would sell their credit baiances to buy certificates on margin, and the large producers would deposit their certificates with brokers to buy options. Now they are selling their crude oil and banking the cash.

Unparalleled Activity.

There will be unparalleled activity in the fields this month. Scouts are now leasing anything and everything that remotely resembles oil territory. All the small well territory in the Bradford and Allegheny fields is being drilled and old wells are being cleaned out and shot with nitro-glycerine to increase their output.

PLEA FOR BUCHANAN.

The Wife Murderer's Case Before the United States Supreme Court.

Washington, April 12.—Justice Brown, of the United States supreme court, yesterday heard the representatives of attorneys and received the petition of Robert W. Buchanan, under sentence of death in New York for the murder of his wife, for a stay of proceedings. The argument was made by Judge J. J. Noah, of Washington, and George W. Gibbons and D. A. Spellissy, of the New York bar, attorneys for Buchanan. Justice Brown directed that the application for the writ of error be presented to a full bench of the supreme court on Monday, the 15th inst.

CREW RESCUED BY LIFESAVERS

Feared That the Stranded Steamer Groatan Will Go to Pieces.

Beaufort, N. C., April 12.—Captain Gaskill and the crew of the Lookout life saving station took all the passengers from the disabled steamer Groatan. The Groatan is now lying about two miles from the beach on the east side of the cape listed well over with about seven feet of water in the lower hold. A northeast gale is blowing and the sea is so rough that a boat cannot be got off the beach. A tug is expected this afternoon and unless assistance arrives soon the steamer will be a total loss.

Verdict for Personal Injuries.

Camden, N. J., April 12.—Albert H. Simons of Hammonton was given a verdict yesterday for $9,500 in a damage suit against the Fruit Growers' union and co-operative society. In May, 1893, when in employ in the company's store at Hammonton, Simons was ascending an elevator when the large wheel burst and fell on his head.
